"Lobo" Says

When a baby starts learning to walk, the times comes when the parents must back off and allow it to make those mistakes that send the little one tumbling to the floor. Sometimes they suffer bruises or on rare occasions they might actually hurt themselves as a result of the fall. But generally speaking, babies learn to walk by taking a few steps at a time. They learn to be cautious and they learn to sit down very quickly when they realize they are losing their balance. But come what may, they will keep trying until they learn to walk, run, and play. They must not be carried because they must learn to WALK!

This very same thing applies to people trying to learn dowsing. It is certainly helpful to have aid in the beginning, but the time does come when each person must learn to stand on his own two feet. Beginners must learn to take a few steps at a time without losing their balance. Like a baby, they should learn to walk on even ground where there is less danger of stumbling or tripping. They can gradually challenge a little tougher terrain and by doing so, learn more about the pitfalls that could cause a disaster in their dowsing.

Those dedicated people who must learn to dowse regardless of the bumps and bruises suffered until they can walk alone will reach their goal, regardless of how hard it might be, or how long it takes. They get a glimpse of a new world through dowsing that they have to explore. Some of them are born with pioneer blood running through their veins that is too hot for the humdrum boredom of taking life at random. They feel the excitement of exploring those radiations few people are even aware of, and they learn how the mind is capable of identifying one from another through concentration.

In the beginning it is usually necessary for the beginner to use instruments of some sort in order to read through it, what the mind is relating through the nerves and muscles. The dowsing instrument does not work by itself, and that is exactly what has stumped scientists as they strive to explain dowsing. The human mind is necessary to locate the radiation being dowsed for. It must send a message through the nerves to the muscles holding the instrument, and by doing so the rod locks or the pendulum moves in a definite pattern that means something to the dowser because he has already programmed his mind to react in that manner. This is exactly what makes dowsing possible.

The baby that was learning to walk could never climb a mountain where the rocks rolled out from under the feet, or in snow or ice. He must learn to hold his balance as well as his footing in loose, rocky areas through experience. His instructor cannot place his feet in the right places, nor brace him on dangerous mountain terrain until he reaches the summit. These things are learned by experience.

One day the baby might become a proficient mountaineer as he gains confidence in his capabilities. He will be older and there will be many miles covered between the time he was learning to walk and the day he became a mountaineer. And the very same thing can be said for the amateur dowser until he, or she, becomes proficient. I cannot do your dowsing for you, and I cannot always be there to pick you up when you fall. My phone will not be available for those midnight jawing sessions that sometimes last for an hour or two. You must hold your balance and place your feet carefully to avoid taking that spill that you dread so fearfully.

It really gets disgusting when amateurs start calling on Sundays asking a dozen questions about a location they have that measures a few inches under the surface, but they are afraid to dig a hole for fear of no treasure being in the bottom. Some of the UDA members have done this repeatedly. I could have dug twenty holes to the depth they thought their treasure was in the length of time it took for them to call and get me out of bed to help in their emergency.

Now fellas, babies DO grow up sometime during their lives and I certainly hope you are not setting a pattern to follow the rest of your days. Your UDA membership entitled you to call when a problem was encountered. But now, memberships are running out and you must refer to the magazines, your notes from class, or maybe the trial and error method. When there is no one to lean on you should learn quicker. But remember this: if others can learn dowsing, so can you.

The majority of our UDA members are learning faster than most of you may realize. Think back to the time when the word dowsing was nothing more than a question in your mind. Then compare your knowledge to that day and you will be amazed at how much you have progressed. The same thing will continue to happen as long as you have been working. To stop might mean defeat for some, but it might be a temporary resting place for others. You have not failed as long as you continue to try, regardless of how long that might be.

I believe healing is one of the most satisfying experiences a person can have early in a dowsing career. We have seen students treat people they knew and many of them were completely healed of serious health problems. But always remember that nobody except God can heal. I don't care how famous people get, they are helpless when it comes to healing unless God is willing to heal the person they are trying to help. Make sure you never place your own importance above the Lord. Keep the ego under control and just be happy to be an instrument that connects the person with ill health with the Lord.

We have revealed a tremendous amount of dowsing information to you through the UDA magazines during the past two years. I know people will benefit from the knowledge we have shared with them and they will pass it on to others until dowsers everywhere will know how to apply it to their daily problems. I have been pleased to have an opportunity to give dowsing a boost. It has been extremely good to me, and I am convinced that our efforts will make the lives of others more productive and enjoyable.

Take care that you never degrade dowsing, and remember, whatever success you may achieve will be the results of your own determination. When you fail, don't blame someone else because the steps you take are leaving your own tracks. Climb that mountain to its peak and leave your flag for others to recognize and appreciate. There are rewards far beyond your wildest dreams down the highway to success.

The Mail Box

Dear Lobo,

I just recently subscribed to your magazine only to find out-December will be your last issue. It really seems a shame that you can't somehow keep it going and sorta keep in the background while you continue your plans.

I just recently became interested in dowsing and must admit my reasons were mainly treasure. However, your magazines on dowsing have changed my outlook as well as my life.

In your September issue I read the article concerning Anderson and Simmons and it somewhat set me back, as I recently purchased one of Carl's Universal rods as well as taking a correspondence course from Russ. I feel perhaps I've made a mistake. However, one can only do his best. I am going on with the course and will learn what I can and plan on taking your basic course as soon as I'm able. I must admit I think I'm learning more from your magazines. You certainly don't pull any punches.

My biggest reason for getting into dowsing was to use it for finding bottles. For about a year I dug bottles as a professional and finally had to go back to a part time job at which I'm still working (silk screen printer.)

I dig old privies, usually 100 to 120 years old. My method for finding them is a spring steel probe. Hope this isn't repulsive to you as all waste is decomposed and it's really very interesting. I guess I'd rather dig for old bottles than do anything. I find many artifacts, old marbles, coins, toothbrushes, buttons, guns, just about anything you could imagine.

I haven't really seriously tried to dowse for bottles as I'm somewhat backwardd dowsing around people, especially strangers,, and, also, I don't know enough.

I tried for some Indian relics and didn't do well, but I don't really mind because I learned something. I dowsed for financial illness about a month ago and things are going very well, nothing spectacular, but all is well and a few good things have come my way.

I used to drink very heavily and smoke loco week but I stopped. However, I can't give up cigarettes. Could you help me concerning this? I really want to stop. I've been smoking since I was about 15 and I'm 41. It's really an addiction.

I know you've got more important things; however, I could just keep on writing. I plan on buying some of your pendulums, and I want to get your first volume. Perhaps I'll dig up something good and buy one of your dowsing rods if the Lord is willing.

Sincerely,
Dale Steele
Alton, Illinois

Dale,

If you really want to quit smoking, lay your pack of cigarettes on the table, take your dowsing rod and ask the Lord to heal that problem. Angle rods or any other dowsing instrument will work just fine. Continue asking over and over until the instrument no longer locks to the problem. There is no addiction, illness, nor problem that the Lord cannot heal.

Sam

Dear Sam and Alma:

I sure enjoy reading U.D.A. articles. The fascination of dowsing with unlimited imagination fills my day. I can't come anywhere near your ability. I believe you both will affect the thinking of millions before the end of this century. Your articles on healing are beautiful. I try earnestly to help my wife. So far I haven't had much success. My wife has renal failure with bouts of arthritis. I ask you to place a healing on her. I know your rewards will be in heaven for sure.

We have a more positive, assuring faith since U.D.A. Please accept our $10.00 donation.

Sincerely,
Alwin and Irene Slachta
Ontonagon, Michigan

There is a problem that must be straightened out with the Lord before He will heal your wife. In fact, both of you should have a long serious talk with God because he is not pleased with either of you. A revelation was given to me that He would be willing to heal her ailments when you both do what you know you should.

Thanks for the donation. Did you realize the national average for a secretary to write one letter costs $5.00? There is no charge for us trying to help as many as we can but if you feel like making a donation, we thank you.

Sam

Dear Sam, Alma, & gang:

I would like to add my say to what you have already been told hundreds of times. "I am sure gonna miss you people." Let me say anyway, your magazine was a huge success. I, and many others have profited from it to date, and I know the information contained in the UDA magazines will continue to benefit mankind for years to come.

What I am writing about is, I have been lending my UDA magazines out, letting other people read them. My June, 1977 issue was destroyed, lost or stolen. Anyway, I lost it. Can I get one to replace it? If so, please send it and tell me how much; I will send my check by return mail. Good luck to you in your next venture.

Louis Nelson
Roswell, New Mexico

Louis:

The only magazines we have are by sets; however, you might run an ad in THE STEPS OF THE TREASURE HUNTER and find someone who has not saved them as collector's items. They are fetching around $10 per copy and the prices will go up if the present trend continues.

When you lend your magazines, require something of value to be put up—just to remind those good friends where they borrowed them. This same thing has happened to several other UDA members, and some of them have not been able to get replacements. Don't be surprised if your magazines climb to five times the price they bring currently, and within enough time they could go twice that high. Dowsing is here to stay and interested people who want to learn will pay dearly for the magazines some of you lend to friends frequently now.

Best of luck,
Sam

Dear Sam & Alma:

My grandson Rickey Kent, whom I wrote about and asked you to pray for is doing great! He had cysts behind the eyes as you remember, but we took him back to the doctor October 31, and the cysts had mysteriously vanished. His eyes check 20-20 and the doctor said he had no explanation for it, nor what caused the problem in the first place. Oh how I do thank God with all my heart. I told the doctor that the days of miracles are not over yet, and I praise the Lord for answering prayers.

Mr. Wolfe, I went to the doctor a few days ago and he says my nervous problem is Parkinson's Disease. And the dictionary says it is the deterioration of the nervous system, and there is no cure for it. But I know God is able to cure anything.

Please dowse and help me because I have these two grandsons to finish raising before I go if it be God's will. Without good health that is not easy. I am 63 years of age and my husband is 69. We take care of the boys as if they were our own, and love them just as much as if they had been ours. We have five sons and one daughter.

The tremor is mostly in my right hand, and when I get upset or troubled, it's all over so bad I even have trouble talking. Thank you a million for the help already received.

Mrs. Ora Kent
Asheville, North Carolina

Ora:

A good heart to heart talk with the Lord, accompanied with faith as big as a mustard seed really changes things. We knew that God had healed Rickey's eye problem the very moment we asked because we have enough faith to make it so. And I have the faith to believe your nerve problem is in the hands of the best Healer the world has ever known. The only way He can fail is if you doubt. So hang onto His promises and your healing is guaranteed!

Oh, about leaving before the boys are raised, don't worry because the Lord revealed to me that you will have that, and time to spare.

Sam

Dear Sam,

I am sure that you will recall our previous talks on lost mines, treasures, maps, waybills to same, and so on. As you will remember, my first lost mine and treasure trips took me into the Superstitions of Arizona as far back as 1957. With a penchant for research and the willingness to work hard, I attempted to do what no single-blanket jackass prospector since Shorty Harris of Goldfield, Nevada, has been able to do since around 1907: make a large strike. At that time, 1957, I had no idea just what my hobby would bring me into. In the twenty-one years since then I have prospected parts of Arizona, California and Nevada. Two individuals with Indian backgrounds helped me by setting me on authentic locations, but with no specific details, other than a wave of the hand and the words: "Seek and ye shall find, if it is meant for you!!!"

My research hours grew to astronomical figures. My hours, days, weeks in the field checking turned into many years. Perhaps a rough summation would be of much interest to your readers.

Both the Indians and the Spanish and the Mexicans who followed them buried mines and treasures. As best as I can translate it, the Indians have a self-imposed curse which says that all the treasures and valuables will be kept until the return of Quetzalcoatl, the winged serpent, at which time all the treasures will be turned over to him, Quetzalcoatl, to do as he wishes with these riches. Lots of people say "hogwash;" however, any Indian who attempts to take from these places—well, they know the penalty is death, and an extremely unpleasant one with every attempt made to also force the culprit to lose his soul as well as his life.

Indians who are informed, such as an eldest son, pass on the information, on skin maps, to the next in line. Transgressions are dealt with harshly and swiftly.

The Spanish and Mexicans are the ones who buried their mines and treasures until, hopefully, they could return to repossess same. Cleverly hidden, they still retain death traps inside for the unwary. Death pits, death slides and overhead dead falls await the naive or the overanxious ones who can relocate a buried entrance and open same.

In connections with a spot of interest, I sent you a picture in late 1975, a year in which you still had time enough to dowse pictures for people. You told me to dig 26 feet east of where I was in the picture. This was done and an extremely well contoured sealed opening was discovered under just a few inches of overfill. I am sending you a diagram of how it was done by the Spaniards. There were two and one-half feet of cement with interjected pieces of bedrock.

If this information is of use to any of your real amateur mine or treasure hunters, please publish same. As you know, I desire to remain anonymous.

With all best wishes,
(Name withheld at sender's request.)

Dear Sam and Alma:

On August 14, 1978 around six or seven o'clock in the morning I partially lost my memory. I could not recall some events that happened and some things I had done July 29-August 1 when asked about them by my wife. By noon my memory was much better, I did not feel right and I had a headache which progressively got worse.

Around five or six o'clock I dialed your number, and the very pleasant lady answering the phone put me in touch with Alma who very graciously said hold the phone as she contacted Sam. In just a few minutes you informed me that I had a clot on the brain but that it was now eliminated.

All I could say was "Praise the Lord" and the headaches ceased in just a few seconds. Words cannot express my gratitude to you wonderful people. I am indebted to you and I look forward to the time when I can be of assistance to you in some little way in your crusade to be helpful to all those who will accept the leading of the Lord.

Family and friends insisted that I have a medical checkup just to be sure I was O.K., so to satisfy everyone I went for a complete medical examination August 22nd. They did not find anything wrong. They then told me to go to the lab for extensive blood tests. I went for the blood tests August 28th. They took three vials of blood and told me that it would take about seven days to complete the test. I received a report by phone on September 4th saying that everything was normal.

All praise to God the Father, Son, and the Holy Ghost.

Thankfully in the Name of JESUS,
Waylon B. Wilson

Hello, Sam and Alma:

Today is a nice mellow Sunday afternoon, and I thought of you both and decided to write a letter, instead of calling on the phone. My dowsing is going along in "fits and starts," and I may be on sort of a plateau, as the saying goes. I do some dowsing for my relatives, when asked. Sometimes success, sometimes not. I've dowsed the Alaska fishing grounds for my nephews. They use 36' trollers, but no feedback as yet. My niece, for the best vocation to follow. She's doing it and quite happy. A dental problem for my sister-in-law. She's following it, and satisfied with the results. She had a pyorrhea problem. Two people called about your dowsing course. One from Washington and another from Alabama. I expressed my opinion of it all, as like learning to play golf. You go to the pro for instructions, then practice and practice. It's as simple and as difficult as that. It's an entirely new way of thinking opening up for them. I hope they both took the course and followed through.

I have a feeling I'd do better in a new locality. Would you mind dowsing it out for me? I tried several times myself, but I'm not satisfied with the answers. Thank you for everything.

Roy Gamman
Everett, Washington

About sixty miles southwest of Fort Worth, Texas, is a small town by the name of Stephenville. My dowsing tells me this is the best location in these United States for you. You might want to look it over some time when it's handy. Don't take my word for it: go see.

Sam

Dear Sam,

I just must take the time to drop you a line and let you know how things have worked out.

I attended your dowsing class in Michigan last July and have been putting your fine instructions to practice. I have been called back to work and have been working steadily since, and so have been somewhat limited in my practicing.

I have just returned from visiting my brother, Rinehold, whom you may recall had a mental problem. I had you dowse his condition at the end of our third class and you found five demons in him. Well, you dowsed him in your mobile home and asked the Lord to remove these demons. I promised to let you know about his condition. I am happy and ever thankful for the great favor you have done for him and the rest of the family.

I am happy to say he is well and I believe he is once more in the faith of the Lord. He appeared to be his old self and had just returned from a fishing trip in Canada. Tonight I talked with his fishing partners and they said he was normal and enjoyed the experience.

I also asked the Lord through the pendulum and He confirmed that Rinehold had no demons, had no more medication in him and that his health was good. Many thanks to you and your great ability as a healer and in doing the Lord's work through dowsing.

I wish to attend your advanced course in dowsing next year. Perhaps by that time I'll be ready.

God bless you and your fine wife,
Arthur W. Deering
Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Dear Sam & Alma:

Enclosed are the pictures I took in Charlotte, North Carolina class last July. They didn't turn out as good as I had hoped.

In the healing session we had on Sunday, I put a man's name on the list who had Parkinson's Disease, also arthritis in his hips and spine so bad he stood at a 45 degree angle. He was unable to feed himself, or even put on his clothes. Now he stands straight up and is completely healed of both troubles. I wanted you and all the UDA members to know how God works through your healing sessions.

Harry Stephens
Waxhaw, North Carolina

Harry,

We appreciate your letter very much! Yes, God does heal through our classes, and that might be one of the greatest lessons our students learn since healing is truly a treasure indeed. How much do you suppose this man would have given for his health back? Isn't it wonderful? God didn't charge him a cent. Thanks for writing.

Sam

Dear Sam, Alma, & Rheba:

This is a long overdue letter of thanks and deep appreciation for your prayers that helped me so much. The sore spot in my spine is gone and never came back. That is one big relief for me!

I read that you no longer will publish the UDA magazine after the December issue. Sure am sorry to hear that, although I understand why. I really am going to miss it. UDA is a super magazine and I treasure every issue, and I have them all.

Are you going to hold more dowsing classes after you stop publishing the magazine? If so, I would appreciate information for 1979 schedule. Please let me know soon. God bless you all!

Sincerely,
Lee Babcock
Mauston, Wisconsin

Lee:

We are happy to hear that your spine was healed. But I have never found anything that my Lord cannot do. Sometimes He refuses for His own reasons, but that has already been explained earlier, or I suppose it will be later since the Mail Box comes first.

Yes, we will still hold a few classes during 1979 in order that people can get proper training in dowsing instead of what a few instructors imagine to be dowsing instructions. There will be a schedule accompanying this magazine when it arrives.

Thanks for the kind words, Lee. If God hadn't revealed an advancement in our work, we would have continued publishing the magazine. He told us we had revealed enough so anyone could learn if he really wanted to, and it was time to put away the publication and prepare for the next assignment. It's a relief on one hand, and a regret on the other because we have lots of wonderful people in UDA. Just hope everyone continues to learn as they should.

Sam, Alma, & Rheba

Dear Sam & Alma:

I was glad to get your letter, and thanks a lot for praying for my brother-in-law. His name is Melvin Jack Jr. I don't hear from him very often, but he is better and goes uptown and around. Since he lives in Elizabethtown, Tennessee, we don't get to see each other very often.

I enjoy the UNITED DOWSERS magazine so much I have decided to order a couple sets of volume number 1, and was wondering whether you have sets of volume number 2 available.

In the September issue, 1978, you had an article on "LIFE INSURANCE" that really makes a person stop and think. Surely appreciate it.

I remain
Gerald Foster
Tribune, Kansas

Gerald:

We are happy to hear that Melvin is better, and there is no doubt in my mind but what he will continue to do so.

Yes, we have sets of volume number 1, also volume number 2 available in sets. At the present time, there is a pretty good supply of both. We all know the demand will increase after we stop publishing UDA, and we anticipated that because I knew there weren't any other qualified instructors who knew enough about dowsing to satisfy the demand.

You would be surprised at the number of people who have contacted us to express their appreciation for the article on LIFE INSURANCE. When a person stops and really looks at his present situation, and considers whether he is ready for a nuclear war today, it makes his disastrous situation a little clearer. The Lord has told me it's coming; I believe it, and I will surely try my best to be ready.

Best wishes,, Gerald,
Sam & Alma

Dear Sam:

Enclosed is my check for $27.95, less discount for an oil pendulum. Question: Can you give me the name and address of association members living in Oklahoma? My purpose and reason for asking is that by having an association with others would be beneficial. I enjoy the magazine.

Sincerely,
Bob Murphy

Bob,

We started collecting names with this same thing in mind a long time ago. But so many UDA members told us not to give out their names that we dropped the idea. Now we don't know who would like to associate with other dowsers and who wouldn't. If you have all the magazines I'll bet you can learn if you really want to. I didn't have one tenth the information you people have when I was learning but there was no shortage in determinations I'll betcha.

Sam

Dear Sam & Alma:

Just received your magazine yesterday and I can't seem to stop reading until it has been finished. Then I will review it as I have done the others many times.

I am looking forward to the advanced class next month. Maybe I am being a little bit premature in finding out whether we will have reservations at the same place—Motel 6? And will we be picked up and taken to class, then be delivered back to the motel? I don't remember the address.

I am also interested in the pendulum you have listed, and will take one of each next month when I come to the advanced class.

Sincerely,
Neal Knighten
Kennewick, Washington

Neal,

Our secretary, Rheba, sends out cards for Motel 6 and leaves making reservations up to the student. This has worked out better than when we made them, and half the time the students had made other plans. So we just quit holding rooms that we guaranteed payment for, then they weren't used.

The pendulums are selling fast but we have put a set aside so you can pick them up next month in class. If the members knew how well these instruments perform, we would have been sold out before now. Those who have them will thank the day they made out their orders because when these are gone, no more will be made. And duplications will not work so the copies will be duds by comparison.

See you in class,
Sam

Dear Alma and Sam,

I have an afghan here that I've been wanting to send you, because you're both dear friends, and it's a small way of saying thank you. I crocheted part of it, and Merrill's grandmother finished it. I've had to put it away, waiting for a special time to bring it out, and now I'd like you to have it. I'm crocheting two other ones, but will be a while before they are finished.

A day doesn't go by that Merrill doesn't douse our healing and his maps. We are thankful to the Lord, and for you, that we're learning about this dowsing.

To stay healthy, help others, and have some added income when Merrill retires from the Fire Department would be great. You know, Merrill has been dowsing me every day. Well, after you said I was cured of the breast cancer, he dowsed and found that, instead of one guardian angel, he now has two. How about that? He checks me once in a while for cancer since I was treated and cured. And every day I thank the Lord for the healing and for you. The breast cysts are smaller,, and I don't have any bowel problem. Have had some kind of viral infection in neck, probably what Merrill had, so have been dowsing that. Merrill's neck isn't stiff anymore and his back feels better. I use the metaphysical healing method every day, also, douse for financial healing.

I wrote Bruce Copen for information on his machines. I'm anxious to hear and to get one, probably the portable. Merrill will need to take your advanced course. He also has a six month class beginning in paramedic training September 11. That's required.

Take care of yourselves. Sam, when you have the time would you check me, just to make sure everything is okay. It has been almost three months since we were over.

Love, Annette and Merrill Cherry
Brea, California

Dear Sam & Alma,

Thank you so much for your hospitality. I really enjoyed our visit, and as usual received much benefit from being with both of you.

When I signed up for your basic class over a year ago, I had no idea how much my life would change! During the class I received complete healing of a 35-year heart problem, along with a number of other physical ailments. I have phoned you several times since with problems, and your dowsing has brought help quickly.

Last June I told you about my son, who had spent two years in mental hospitals, but still appeared mentally ill. He was unable to properly care for himself, drifting from place to place, quite out of control. You dowsed him and found that he had several demons as well as mental illness. You rid him of the demons and mental illness by dowsing and his dramatic improvement has been marvelous to see.

Since I received my radionics machine I have kept it busy and have been amazed at what it can do...from helping birth defects to de-fleaing the cat. (My cat thanks you!)

Actually, I have not practiced as much as I should on locating treasures, in spite of all the fascinating instructions given in class. My only excuse is that my primary efforts have been in the field of healing. Health is so much more important than money. However, money is nice too and I shall toss out all excuses and begin practicing daily with that fascinating Treasure King pendulum, as well as the rods. I won't be satisfied until I find at least a small treasure. Sam is right about veins being easier to locate than treasures. My partner and I did locate a good commercial vein of jade for a young friend. I find it great to work with another dowser in the field. We keep reminding each other, "...but Sam says..." Thanks again for everything. God bless you both.

Much love,
Helen Sears
Los Osos, California

Dear Sam,

I really look forward to receiving the U.D.A. magazine. There is just no way to replace it. I keep them all with me on the boat and read and re-read them all the time. I get more from United Dowers than from any other source.

I am looking forward to attending your basic class as soon as possible.

I thank you very much and I hope to see you next year.

Yours truly,
R.E. Danley
Blountstown, Florida

Dear Sam & Alma,

I thought I would write to let you know what was going on. I just received the last issue of United Dowers. Losing the U.D.A. is like losing a dear old friend. It has been something to look forward to with great expectations every three months, but I wish you all the luck and God's guidance in your undertakings.

For a long time I thought that digging up a treasure was the most important thing in dowsing, but it really is not. It will be nice to find treasures, but I have found treasures through your guidance in dowsing. I have learned to understand myself and others and most important, I am trying to let God guide me in whatever it is I am on this earth for. I am learning patience through dowsing. I have what you may call a "gut feeling" that I am being guided by God to some undertaking in the future. I have no idea what it is, but I do feel I am being led somewhere.

From your June issue I used the Treasure Key, concerning the sale of my old home and the purchase of the new home I am now in. And do you know what? The Treasure Key worked! At first there was a problem on the sale of my old home, but when I used the "Key" the sale went through easily. What the "Key" really means is letting God take full control and at the same time doing everything I can on my end. It works! I am using the "Key" on something else, but I am also doing everything I can on my end and I know the problem will be taken care of.

Would you please correct me if I am wrong? It is about hunting season again and I believe I have the wave length on deer and elk. Deer's is $24\frac{3}{4}$, so I am taking $\frac{1}{2}$ which is $12\frac{3}{8}$ on the Lobo rod. Elk's is $17\frac{1}{2}$ so I am taking $8\frac{3}{4}$. The tests I have run on this have come up positive. My locks are solid on these two tests, but there are more tests I want to run on this project.

Sam, something strange has happened that I would like you to check me on, if you please. The thought of treasure used to be so strong that was all I could think of, but in the past few months I have come across two treasures which cause me trouble. One is on the coast and is quite large, in the form of silver bars and coins at a depth of twenty feet. The other is small, about twenty-five to thirty miles from where I live. I asked God if I could have the one on the coast and got no reply. The second one I haven't asked about and it does not interest me. That much is fact. Neither one really interests me that much. In fact I very rarely think about them anymore. My father keeps asking me about the one on the coast, but I keep coming up with reasons not to go after it. A friend of mine has been after me about the small one and I have given him reasons not to go after that one. I know I haven't lost interest in treasure hunting, but I can't seem to get with it like I used to. WHY?

I know that I do not want to punch the time clock too much longer and I want to be on my own financially. I do feel something is awaiting me out there, but I don't know what or where or when. Since I have left it up to God to do the guiding I know He is guiding me somewhere and to some useful end.

I have ordered your five other pendulums and I really don't know why. I just feel I should have them. I know that I can tune the Lobo rod to do the same thing, but for some unknown reason I feel I also need the pendulums.

Since your June issue of U.D.A., things have happened that are almost unbelievable, but everything is running so smooth and easy and there is not the frustration that used to be there. It is so fantastic what a person can do with God's help.

Sam and Alma, what you two have done and are doing is a miracle from God and I do love you both so very much.

Please keep in contact and let me know how you are doing and if you need any help on anything please let me know. I don't know what I could do, but I would love to help you if at all possible.

Sincerely,
Daniel K. Voyles

Daniel, I just checked and God is definitely taking charge of your life. I can tell you it will be a while before you will be financially independent, but never doubt it, you will be!

We have tried to show people how God works in their lives when given the chance. He will turn sorrow into joy, frustrations into peace, and hatred into love. When a person discovers the advantage in turning his life over to Him, nothing is the same. Those things that we thought were so important suddenly seem foolish when He has the reins. He will provide all your necessities, as well as the desires in your heart if you will but walk uprightly before Him. that is in the Bible and I believe it with all my heart.

You will know what He has planned for your life in ample time to make the proper preparations. If a treasure is needed to carry out His plan, He will reveal it and help you so there is no problem whatever in making the recovery. How do I know? Make three guesses while remembering that I have traveled the same road you are on right now. The Lord has revealed many things to me because I asked Him to take complete charge of my life. I have no worries, no fears, no financial problems like I used to have when I was doing everything my own way. We are happy to know that you followed our advice. God will never let you down.

Sam

Dear Sam & Alma:

Bob needs another order of spare antennas. Please send four for the Lobo Map and Field Rod.

Enclosed is $12.60, using Bob's discount of 10%

Please let us know if you will have any openings in your advanced class. We are hoping you can find a larger area for the class. Bob would very much like to be "advanced" and I would sure like to co-pilot the trip over.

We are eager to receive the September United Dowzers magazine, which we are expecting any day now.

Best wishes,
Beverly Chapman

Dear Sam & Alma:

Enclosed is an order and check for your five latest pendulums. I purchased Alma's Treasure Pendulum at your advanced class last Spring.

I received the September issue of the U.D. magazine yesterday.. I hope I'm in time to get one each of your limited supply of pendulums.

While I recall your telling us in class that you must discontinue the magazine, it HURTS ME to read it in the September issue. If I could only convey to you what your friendship means to me — so VERY much. Well, the magazine means ALMOST as much. You two fine people have helped me rediscover God. And, secondary only to that, is dowsing ability and your divulging your dowsing research. Thank you so very much.

With love,
Harold F. Byrd

Dear Sam & Alma:

Many thanks for your efforts on my behalf. You are right, my problem has gone away..

Ten months before, I had practiced "metaphysical healing" on this condition and it disappeared for seven months. When it reappeared, I enlisted your help.

If I had not taken your dowsing class, there would have been no one to help. The medical people did not seem able to cure the condition.

The rewards for having taken your class are great and I haven't found the first nickel yet.

Once again, many thanks and may God bless both of you.

Sincerely,
Dick LaChance

Dear Sam & Family:

I am sorry to hear you are dissolving the U.D.A. It has been the greatest. I hope mankind realizes what you have done and are doing for them. Hope you are successful in your new ventures.

By the way, did anyone ever check for that buried treasure at Pinto Springs in Utah? I still wonder if I was right.

Thanks for everything.

P.G. Lynch
Oregon

The only reason we are dissolving UDA is because the Lord has given us more important work to do. When God directs a move, success is guaranteed. And we are looking forward to the assignment as it entails dowsing, mining, healing, developing new products, and more. We will eventually own in the neighborhood of 1© million acres of land containing minerals, timber, oil, etc. We will open factories across the United States as they are needed, but God will tell us when and where they are needed. We are not vanishing from the scene nor skipping out with our tails between our legs. The members are, and always will be remembered as one of our fondest memories.

I have no idea of the Pinto Springs treasure. In fact, we try to dismiss treasures from our mind as quickly as possible except when the Lord reveals we should recover to carry on our work. Not once has He ever revealed anything that was formally known — and that includes every treasure that has ever been written up in treasure magazines, too. What he reveals to us to be recovered is totally unknown to anyone.

Sam

Greetings,

Although I have wanted to write to you several times it wasn't until I read in the last issue of the magazine that you would be discontinuing it that I finally decided to go ahead and write.

I almost did it after the previous edition where you wrote about making a find near Las Vegas. When I first started to read about that I thought that maybe it was going to be about "my" treasure, but then I found out it was another one. I think I have been right on the ground where the treasure is, but didn't do any digging. It is one of those that is right along a highway and out in the open.

I haven't dug any treasures out of the ground but have made enough to be at least even as to the cost of the basic course I took at T or C in November of 1974 and the cost of two rods plus some expenses. I am on the mailing list for surplus government vehicles, and decided one time to see if I could dowse the high bid for a pickup truck I was interested in. I dowsed to see what the highest submitted bid was so far — not the highest that had been received — then I submitted my bid $25.00 higher. I goofed though because I bid about $43.00 higher instead of $25.00, so I don't quite have it perfected.

I paid $1230.00 for the 1974 Chevrolet C10 Custom with everything plus a fiberglass camper shell — a pretty good buy I think. I sold it for a little over $1000.00 more than I paid for it.

I leave tomorrow to pick up a 1975 Dodge 6 cyl. pickup which I got for bidding $1340.00 — I don't know what the next highest bid was.

It just goes to show that "treasure" is more than gold or silver that is buried in the ground.

I have tried to find a piece of contractor's building equipment which was probably stolen, but didn't do any good. I got a lead on a map and dowsed it and even drove out to the place but couldn't see anything. I am still going to try more in that line though because usually there is a good reward for leads leading to the property's recovery.

My wife says "hmpf" and doesn't believe in dowsing but doesn't say "no" when I tell her there will be extra money to give to her church's building fund in addition to her regular pledge.

Are you planning any advanced courses for the balance of the year — either at your location or out of town as you have been doing? I would like to get in on one to learn more about pendulum dowsing and also about dealing with health problems. Also interested in knowing more about those machines you write about.

Hope to hear from you,
K.J. Vandecasteele
Benbrook, Texas

Dear Sirs:

A friend of mine wants to buy a good dowsing rod. Would your rod be as good as the Anderson rods? We want this rod for the purpose of locating hidden minerals as well as treasure.

I have used rods for many years, but I still cannot tell commercial ore from non-commercial ore. The rods seem to pull just as strong on low-grade as high-grade. I hope your rod will give us the high or low on the ores. Also, I had one of your students dowse our mining property. He said one place had 20 ounces of silver. When I drilled it, it ran 2½ ounces. He missed as far on other ores. This is the thing I want to eliminate. Please let me hear from you promptly.

Sincerely yours,
R.A. Dinwiddie
New Mexico

Seven feet south of the hole you drilled there are five ounces of silver to the ton. That is the richest spot in the entire deposit. The student made a mistake in evaluating your silver.

Learning to evaluate ore requires experience that some of our students have not had because they cannot become proficient in the classroom. They have to get out there where the minerals are.

I do not push dowsing instruments, but I do say our rod is the best on the market and the students who attend our classes must agree because we have lots of used Anderson instruments that we have taken in trade on ours. If you will look at the ad in this magazine, you will see them advertised at a fraction of the new price. Several of them are just as good as new. In fact,, you could not tell the difference in them and the ones Anderson sells at twice the price.

My dowsing tells me you are good on water, but lack experience to be proficient on minerals. The instrument is important, but success depends mainly on the person using it. Practice is the key.

Sam

Dear Sam and Alma,

We want to thank you both for what you did for us in the Michigan Basic Class. There are very few days that go by that we don't talk about you, Alma and the class. It was a wonderful experience, a lot of fun and very educational.

The healing Doris received in class for the diabetes, tumor, and the heart trouble cannot be paid for in money. The swelling left her feet and legs and has not returned. Her sugar count was 320 a few days before class and has been dropping steadily since. The doctor can't figure out why, as she was on a strict diet before class but now she eats anything she wants.

Some people may say, "Well, she told Sam what was wrong with her so he fixed her." Well, nobody told Sam or anyone in the class that my back hurt every time I moved and has since February 9, 1964. I was trying to catch up my notes when you came strolling back down the aisle saying something about back problems and touched my back in exactly the two places it was hurting. I was still busy writing and didn't pay much attention, but a few days later I realized my back wasn't hurting and then remembered back to class when you did this. I wondered at the time how you knew this but was too busy writing to give it much thought. My back has not hurt the slightest bit since.

We were having some problems with our dowsing, so I said to Doris, "You know if God will heal our health problems He will heal our dowsing problems."

So we proceeded to ask God to heal our dowsing problems and now we are much better dowers than we were. It is amazing how accurate you can get in such a short time.

Enclosed are pictures of our July dowsing class. We are still praying that God will provide an opening in the Advanced Class for us and if so would you please contact us immediately as we are very interested in this class.

We have asked God for healing of other people and have had some good results. But we feel like we need the Advanced Class very badly.

Best wishes always,
Your friends,
Doris and Leslie Kemp

Dear Folks,

Received the Bible and pendulum today. Many thanks for both. Mary and I are going to church regularly now and the spiritual improvement has been fantastic, not to mention the financial improvement. Have not made an attempt to recover the cache located on the map yet. First priorities first. Went back on the road, had bills to pay, and due to the laws of Texas, will take a little time to work out everything. I have no desire to hear that 30-30 talking.

Enclosed a check for $24.75 for another Universal Pendulum. Mary got this one.

Sam, I realize you are busy but when you have time would appreciate an answer to the following question. Why is it necessary to try to disprove a location such as the one we found on my map in El Paso? If I take a stack of maps and ask the question: "Lord, will you show me a treasure I can have?" My definition of treasure is still anything of value, but have divided it into categories. If he says yes, and I go through the correct procedure to eventually come to X marks the spot on the map. At this point, if I start trying to disprove it am I not exhibiting a lack of faith in God? He has already said it is there, even though I can't see, feel, or taste it. At this point in time I am already convinced that if I have the faith to act, even though I can't see whatever it is I want and have the right Christian motives, it will come to pass. I realize I have to make the effort on my part (finding and recovery) because He isn't going to drop it on my doorstep. Another way of putting the same thing is that I have to ask, seek and I think a lot more important, I have to do a bunch of believing.

Wishing the both of you the best.

We care,
Gary and Mary Sinclair
Texas

Gary,

Note.
As your dowsing progresses, you will soon discover how easy it is to make mistakes in the field. To the amateur, magnetic pockets or mineral pockets react like treasures. Mental implants can drive a person up a tree, and there are those pesky remnant rays remaining after a treasure has been recovered. Every dowser who searches for treasures must have plenty of fortification in the determination department or the numerous problems encountered in the field will send him home talking to himself.

In addition to the field problems, the devil doesn't miss a trick in trying to foul up a Christian. The more good you are doing for others, the more he interferes by causing you to get wrong answers by dowsing. You will learn to call on the Lord for a shield when that time comes or your dowsing will suffer greatly. Jacob used a shield of God's white light to protect himself from Satan's interference. I have used it many times until the Lord gave me a shield of my own. There are problems that must be overcome, but God is always there when you need Him. The more you dowse, the more you will be working directly with the Lord. He can help you find treasures or anything else you need. But don't ever imagine dowsing to be easy until you have mastered the pitfalls that lie ahead. I have never known a professional dowzers who wasn't walking pretty close to God.

Sam

Dear Sam and Alma,

I have enclosed a $50.00 money order for a Volume I collector's set of United Dowzers Magazines. The other $20.00 money order made out to Alma Wolfe is for one Treasure King Pendulum. The money order made out to Sam Wolfe is a donation or a small token of appreciation for the dowsing help I requested for my sister-in-law, Nickie Jolliff, who was in critical condition in the hospital at the time.

The following is some feedback on the results of your dowsing skill. (A) On August 23 you told me via phone that my sister-in-law had a blood clot in her head and you said a healing started at 2:45 p.m. California time, which would be 5:45 p.m. Sault time. I was talking to my brother-in-law (Nickie's husband) at 11:30 p.m. the same day, August 23, and I asked him about Nickie's condition between 3:00 and 4:00 (Sault time) and he said that she was in pretty bad shape. Then I asked him how her condition was later on in the day. He said that at 6:00 p.m. Sault time she sat up in bed and fed herself. She had a bowl of soup and a piece of pie. The nurses attending her could not understand where Nickie got the surge of strength to feed herself. (B) On August 24 I called you again for more help because Nickie was complaining about a sore chest and cramps in her stomach and was having difficulty breathing.

Your good wife Alma, whom I would have to say is "gifted" in saying the right words in such a special way made it a little easier for me to take the bad news, when she told me that you found there was something wrong with her lungs, and that you could not help because it was too close to her time. Nickie passed away August 26 at approximately 10:00 p.m.

As of this date, September 8, no one knows what caused her sickness or what she died from. When she first went into the hospital, the doctors told Nickie that she had a virus infection. I'll stop here before you get the idea that I am long winded.

I thank you ever so much for the help you gave when it was needed. I hope that I can attend your dowsing classes in 1979, so please send me a schedule of the classes as soon as they are available. Thanks again.

Sincerely,
J.P. Lemieux

Dear Sam and Alma,

I still never cease to marvel at your radionics and dowsing cures for those with health problems. At your class I attended at La Puente, the class and I watched and participated as you cured one person of cancer, one of aluminum cookery poisoning, one of a tumor. I have also watched in fascination as you used the radionics principles to cure people of ailments. The pendulum, in your hands, and with God's divine blessings, makes you a modern day blend of Edgar Cayce and Abbe Mermet combined to a point where you can and do reach into infinity itself to cure people.

Let us speak specifically of one person, my twenty-nine year old daughter. Noting that something was wrong, her mother and I had her admitted to a major hospital for a brain wave scan. This was taken when my daughter was three years of age. The scan showed no damage nor any impairment. From that time on, 1952, until this year, there was no answer for mental retardation that defied any answer whatsoever. Specialists and medical doctors were employed with a 100% lack of any success whatsoever. Doctors of Osteopathy and Chiropractic were tried, but their manipulative methods were also a complete failure. In desperation I ventured into the so-called field of the occult for help. A world famed psychic fell flat on his face and one very competent psychic reader in Long Beach also fell flat on her face.

The Spring of 1978 saw me again seeking help for my daughter. This time I went to see Sam and Alma Wolfe. Sam and Alma took a look at my daughter's picture; a picture of a young lady with absolutely no visible signs of mental retardation. Both put their pendulum dowzers into action. Both gave me a puzzled look and said in unison, "Your daughter is not mentally retarded!!!" There was a short stunned silence and then I asked: "If she is not mentally retarded, then what is the problem, 'to wit,' is there a mental block, curse, or what is the problem?"

Sam and Alma then put their pendulums back into operation. Alma almost immediately said "Demon" — Sam almost immediately corrected her and said — "no, six demons!!!" Sam, Alma,, myself and another guest present then went into prayer and meditation, at the end of which, Sam and Alma assured me that the six demons which had, according to Alma, entered my daughter's body at birth, had been driven out of her.

Now, there is an old English saying "The proof of the pudding is in the eating!" In the six months since this happening my daughter has been transformed from a bewildered person into a strong assertive person. The slurred speech has completely disappeared and she is well on the road to at least a partial recovery from the effects of twenty-nine years of being hostess to six demons. Coincidence? No such thing!!! Another proof of the power of the pendulum in proper hands.

You may publish this letter in your "letters from members column" if you wish to do so. However remember that my daughter has been the receipt of many years of gibes, digs, ridicule, etc. from unthinking people. Keep this letter in your files as proof of a "miracle" that you performed. But kindly refrain from publishing my name or my daughter's name.

In everlasting gratitude,
Signed, Her father

How well we remember the look on your face when we told you what your daughter's problem really was. Alma and I are glad we could help her, and by doing so, to help you discover the problem.

Nine percent of the people in mental institutions are there because of demons. We could drive every one of them out if people knew exactly what caused these pitiful souls to be confined. God works through us, which is the reason we are so successful in helping those in need of healing. There are times when we would love to help others, but if they are serving the wrong master, our hands are tied. Give God the praise, Dad; Alma and I were only his instruments.

Sam

Dear Sam and Alma,

The time has come for me to do something that is highly out of character for me to do, and that is write a letter. Not that it is a completely new and novel experience but the frequency rate lately has been quite low.

I want to thank you for using a little radionics on me after the class in Spokane this past summer. The virus had me to a point where life was a tad bit past being anything comfortable. In fact, I believe that if you hadn't petitioned the Lord on my behalf, that I could have expected a crackerjack case of pneumonia as a minimum. As it was, a month with the flu was just about a smidgin past the enjoyable stage.

So once again I thank you for the efforts that you and Alma have expended to help me. And I thank you for the efforts that you all have extended to other folks as well.

I wish I could relate the many triumphs that I have had in dowsing but that is not in the scope of this letter. Some of the boys locally think I am some kind of 'witch' because I've correctly called the number of shots they took at elk, etc. The location and number of elk I've called correctly several times this season. And some of these ole boys think I have something that might possibly be contagious. So they are not going to stand too close and take any chances on something they don't understand.

Sam, I have a Mark 11 Computer and have been using it with a minimum of success on my mother. She has diabetes and is blind. She tried the salt water treatment and I've used several different rates. The last rate tried was 5094, Rate 4, Underfunction 10. If somebody can whip out a good number it would be greatly appreciated.

Sam, you mentioned in Spokane about moving honey bees. Please tell me more about that because I raise a few bees and that would be most helpful to me.

What about moving grasshoppers? And snakes? While I'm on a questioning jag—what is happening to me? My map dowsing isn't improving. I could fiddle around for quite some time and in all probability figure out what is not right, but to my way of calculating you can tell me and save a whole group of time on my part.

As far as the coin cache that I was working on at the Spokane class, it is still safely tucked away in the post hole bank. And I have discovered a lot of real estate where it is not reposing.

Called Jim Hager the other day, and it sure makes me happy to hear about the success he is having on his dowsing with that Canadian mining outfit.

This pen and I are going to part company for awhile—so I'm going to shut it off.

With many thanks,
John Bednorz
Emmett, Idaho

Thanks for all the flowers, John; we really have tried to help everyone possible, and we are glad to know we'll be missed.

Remember that snakes and bees are God's creatures, — which He guards to balance nature. He will allow them to be moved to another locality when they present a problem to humanity, but they are not to be killed except in cases where that becomes a must! To find a rate for moving them, douse to find out how many numbers there are in that particular rate, then douse for each number exactly as if you were dialing them in on radionics. The last number (the one on the right) is found first, then continue working to your left until you have discovered as many numbers as you found to be in the rate.

Once I was planning to move a herd of elk that had overpopulated their feeding grounds. But the Lord would not allow the entire herd to be moved, and He revealed that to me in an unquestionable method. "Only move the excess," I was told, so my dowsing revealed that thirty-seven head must be moved. I followed through and they are very content in the new surroundings.

The reason the salt water did not eliminate the diabetes is because your mother does not have it. She suffers from caries of the spine, which caused her blindness, pericarditis, and anemia. These are listed in the radionics treatment rate book along with the rates for each, pages 135, 144, 149. Wonder what would happen if she was treated 12 times for caries of the spine, and 8 times for the other two problems? Bet they could be treated weekly, starting with caries for 3 hours, then switching to pericarditis three more hours, and finally going to anemia three more hours.

I cannot tell you what to do, but if my mother was in the same condition as yours, I would probably use Underfunction 10, Channel 12 and expect a gradual improvement. It seems certain that her condition has been treated improperly, which accounts for the present condition. Since some instruments do not have Channel 12, then 6 would do.

I have never seen your mother but my dowsing tells me the above are the problems affecting her health. There are other minor ones that the body should eliminate by itself.

Questions and Answers

Q. There are remains of an old Spanish fort near ———. Near the fort is a possible treasure that was buried by the Spaniards. The site has been dug into with a bulldozer and a very large rock was struck. This rock had been hauled in from another area. It was dynamited and down below where the rock had been there were logs of Honduras mahogany found in the hole. Below the logs white sand was found that had been hauled in from some distant deposit. When the workers tried to remove the sand, water was struck in such a quantity that it was impossible to pump it out.

We know the water was designed as a trap or barrier. Did the Spaniards ever double-trap a treasure site? If so, by what means? Sincerely, Merlin Van Dunk.

A. Merlin, the project explained here is nothing more than a false location to keep anyone AWAY from the correct location. There is a tunnel exactly twenty-two yards to the east that contains three tons of gold that was carried in by pack mule from what is now New Mexico. Because more treasure was being brought in, but never arrived due to an Indian massacre, no death traps were placed in this tunnel. So get out of that big hole and locate the tunnel where the treasure is.

Yes, the Spaniards used various death traps to protect their treasures.

Among them were pits with sharp pointed rocks sticking up, cave-ins, slides, deadfalls, poison gas pockets that filled their tunnels, and a host of other surprises. I found one of their treasures in a rattlesnake den of over 400 live guards. There were eight tons of gold bars stacked in the back of a natural small cave where the snakes congregated. To underestimate the cunning of the Spanish miner would be like throwing all caution to the winds. A body might find himself in serious trouble before realizing what had happened.

Q. Dear Alma: A few weeks ago I wrote you a very hasty note inquiring whether Sam had ever heard of, or could possibly prove out smokeless gun powder as an aid for hardening of the arteries. I don't think I explained then, so let me do so now.

I had been reading the last issue of UNITED DOWSERS, and was very impressed with the remedies Sam had written about for diabetes, etc. That same night I had the dream that was clearly written, although, not a handwriting I recognized, about the gun powder. Maybe it was nothing more than a wonderful dream because I had been thinking how wonderful it would be if a remedy could be found for artery conditions—not only for my husband who has brain artery trouble, but for all people. Thank you for reading this. Sincerely, Billie Brenner.

A. Billie, I believe you and lots of other people will learn something new about blood vessels in the article on strokes in this issue. But your letter gives an excellent example of the damage sour milk has done. Your husband does not have hardening of the arteries; his blood vessels have been damaged, or you might class them as having been eaten very thin by the chemicals in buttermilk or other sour milk containing whey. If I had that problem, I would certainly use plenty of mustard, and quit sour milk completely. I wish every person who reads this would eat lots of mustard for at least thirty days in order to avoid having a stroke later in life.

Now let's talk about hardening of the arteries, which is the result of being deficient in hydrogen. The best source of hydrogen is cabbage. A person with hardening of the arteries would probably be the happiest person in town if one fourth head of cabbage was eaten twice a week for four weeks. Severe cases should continue for a couple more weeks, which should eliminate the problem.

Blood vessels can be damaged from the deficiency of vitamin T, which, as you remember, is destroyed by aspirin. Raisins contain vitamin T, and a person trying to plan a diet for the purpose of repairing blood vessels would be doing their system a great favor by including at least one half ounce of raisins daily for a month or more. In addition to vitamin T, raisins are rich in zinc, which is the best healing agent in town.

I am thoroughly convinced that many people will benefit from the articles in this issue. One of the worst problems comes from improper diagnoses when trying to treat one's self. I never guess when illness strikes because that would lead to worse trouble by allowing something to go untreated. Doctors should be utilized when necessary, but the average person should learn to properly diagnose, and do all he can to maintain health. It is a mistake to quit seeing the doctor as several people have told me they did. Dowse a doctor who would serve you best, then stick with him. If he ever indicates that your money is more important than your health, I would drop one like that as if he were a snake. Why hasn't a good doctor told you that your husband doesn't have hardening of the arteries? But, on the other hand, I'll bet one told him he did have. Tain't so, and the cabbage and raisins will prove it. Sam.

Q. Dear Sam: As you know, when people write to you they have a problem. Since I am no exception, here goes: I dowsed for a missing person in Illinois, and came up with a location for a Barbara Gluckert that proved to be a dud. Then one of your students and I dowsed for a Margaret Stern, in Illinois and made a location. Your student Bob Hafer is quite a chap and a real man! Bob made a location in a different area and we were both wrong again. So we tried to locate another person and flubbed up on that one too. Sam, what are we doing wrong? Charles Kuzel, Riverside, Illinois.

A. Charles, the mistake you and Bob made was the same; you both lacked concentration on the people you were searching for. And the new pendulum we have for missing people would not have helped for the same reason. Without proper concentration, dowsing doesn't work.

A few people have sent me clippings of missing people, made phone calls, and there were those who came to our home in hopes that I could locate people so they could collect the rewards. Several of them have offered to split rewards with me, and so on. But the Lord made it clear He has more important work for me to do, and only in rare cases am I permitted to search for people whether living or dead.

Most dowsers find it necessary to use a bait while trying to locate people. They can learn to concentrate hard enough so baits are no longer necessary but it takes time and practice to achieve. And you must remember, sometimes those people you are trying to find do not wish to be found. They have the right to privacy and we must take care not to invade that right. Always dowse to determine whether they need, or want, to be found before engaging in the project. Sam.

Q. Dear "Lobo": I have been trying to locate someone with the capabilities to dowse maps, and have been "taken" by those I have sent maps to. There are several names enclosed, along with the results. Some of them kept my maps as well as my money, while others returned the maps with locations made that do not come close to the actual targets. My question is, can you explain why this seems to be the general trend? Mr. C.L. Underwood, Toowoomba, Australia.

A. Numerous amateur dowsers have visualized big money in commercial map dowsing. Fees usually range from a few dollars to a hundred or more per map, and that is not too much for a dowsing who can make a location and stick with it. But the dowsers you see advertising in magazines for work are usually amateurs who cannot make enough money in the field from their own dowsing; therefore, they turn to dowsing for others.

When a dowsing gets good enough to locate treasures on a map, then he goes and recovers them; he certainly doesn't need to advertise for map dowsing. Think about it for a moment. If you could locate treasures on maps, would you need to make a living dowsing for someone else? Proficiency automatically eliminates a dowsing from commercial work and that's a fact. That was not the situation when dowsers located nothing other than underground water. But it definitely holds true for those dowsing commercially for treasures and don't be kidded into thinking otherwise.

I know most of the dowsers who advertise for commercial map dowsing and I challenge all except one or two to prove me wrong in the statements above. The one or two that I would trust to make locations on maps are NOT advertising themselves as dowsing "instructors" as others are doing who can't cut it in the field. This is the case with the clipping you sent. I know him and his abilities, which fall short of being able to make a living for himself by dowsing. It's too bad that people resort to degrading dowsing by demonstrating how effective it is, while knowing they lack the ability to perform. Sam.

MYSTERIES OF THE PENDULUM

By Sam Wolfe

The pendulum has perplexed amateur dowsers longer than anyone has been able to prove. We find the pendulum mentioned in the Bible but there is no instructions nor indication as to how it might have been used. Clocks have been fashioned to use the pendulum as a weight that swings back and forth, but I am under the impression it was used in dowsing way back in history to tap the Universal Mind for knowledge.

There is no question about the usefulness of this simple instrument in dowsing because I have proven my findings in health problems, water, oil, treasures, and countless other things for years and years. I have made locations of rich mineral deposits on maps over a thousand miles away, then went to the site and uncovered the veins. I have done the same with treasures, finding them exactly as the pendulum had indicated as the locations were pinpointed on maps. Sometimes these objects were within a few miles of my map dowsing location, other times they were clear across the United States.

Learning to use a dowsing instrument of any kind is hard enough until the dowser piles up enough experience to enable himself to fashion dowsing instruments from practically anything he lays his eyes on. Not long ago I demonstrated in class how it is possible to hang onto both ears and make locations with the nerve system. Maybe this sounds silly but the students in that class discovered they could do the same thing. You can experiment with this method of dowsing by grasping both ears between your thumb and forefinger as your eyes are moved to a predetermined target. When your eyes come in contact with the target, notice how your hands start trembling. They may not tremble very hard, however, it should be enough that it can easily be felt.

The main object of this article is to explain a few things about pendulums and their use that might not be common knowledge. We could mention the fact that pendulums have been made out of just about every material known to man. That's general knowledge, so we won't bother to mention it. And we will probably neglect to mention those famous dowsers that most writers include in their dowsing articles, on the grounds that the aim is to write about something new.

About three months ago I was wondering how we could help all the amateur dowsers who flounder in their quest for treasures, oil deposits, water, missing people, caves, danger, and universal dowsing problems. My wife was sitting across the table when the thought struck my mind that pre-tuned pendulums could be made for anything a person needed. So I explained to her that we needed a pre-tuned pendulum just for treasures.

As she concentrated on the need, a vision flashed through her mind and she made a drawing on a piece of paper. I dowsed it, finding the pendulum she drew to be the treasure pendulum I had requested. We were both surprised but our dowsing assured us that the instrument she had seen was indeed the one I had asked for.

Taking advantage of her new-found ability, I asked for another and again a vision of a different pendulum flashed before her eyes. So we continued in this manner until several pre-tuned pendulums had been revealed. Some were to be offered to other dowzers, then there were a few that were for our own personal use. I own some of the finest pendulums a dowser could ask for and more are being made as fast as our machinist can work them into his busy schedule.

These instruments should be used to LOCATE whatever they were designed for, but they should never take the place of the pendulum that is tuned for universal dowsing. My long and tedious tests indicate the oil pendulum will not react to deposits that do not contain enough oil to be classed as commercial. In other words, if there was not enough oil to make a productive well, the pendulum would pass it by without the slightest indication that oil existed in that particular area.

This was what we were trying to achieve by the pre-tuned pendulums and they have proven far beyond my expectations. But I did not, and do not plan to manufacture more when the current limited supply is gone. We were not trying to come up with just another dowsing instrument to put on the market. Our intentions were to make one last effort to help dowzers as much as possible by providing better instruments than were available anywhere else. Now I'm certain these instruments do that.

It would be unfair to dowzers if I did not caution you against duplications of these fine instruments. Already, people are trying to duplicate them but try as they may, their pendulums will not react as these do. So don't be confused by other look-alike instruments, only to discover they lack what REALLY counts when it comes to performance. This is not meant as a sales pitch, because, as I stated before, this was a final effort to help dowzers, and when these pendulums are sold, we have no intentions to manufacture more.

Now let's talk about the performance you should expect to achieve from pre-tuned instruments. Many of you have been instructed in my classes on tuning a dowsing rod. They can be tuned for any treasure, any ore deposit, or anything in particular that you might want to find. It beats me how dowzers with this knowledge can continually mistake mineralized ground or mineral deposits for treasures.

A pre-tuned treasure pendulum must automatically eliminate everything else except treasures. That does not mean that it is tuned for one particular treasure, but you should expect to find buried wealth that would come under the nomenclature of "treasure." This would include several gold or silver coins located in one place, but it would not mean single coins or nuggets. The instrument is made to detect a mass rather than single objects that could be detected by the universal pendulum.

We have received calls from UDA members who couldn't understand why the treasure pendulum would not react to a single coin. The reason is very simple when you stop and think about it. It takes more than a single coin to amass a treasure. So don't become confused during practice if these instruments react differently than you think they should. They do a fantastic job on the items they were designed for.

Pendulums should have cords or chains longer than necessary to zero in on the target being dowsed. We find approximately seven inches to be the best length. But don't forget that the thread used on our instruments (which is actually fishing line) must be adjusted. The adjustment of the cord is just as important as the design, and to be precise, the cord length could be measured in thousandths of an inch.

For ordinary use, adjust the pendulum to something in sight, or you may concentrate on an object. Do not grasp the cord by the end and expect it to perform perfectly; it should be adjusted. The end of the cord should be placed through the first joint of the second finger on the dowsing hand. Let the instrument hang down so the cord fits easily between the thumb and index finger. To find the proper adjustment, start the pendulum swinging to and fro as you SLOWLY pull the cord up with the second finger until it forms a complete circle.

The instructions are nothing more here than suggestions for those who have never learned to use a pendulum. If you already have a method that works well, stick with it. Or possibly this method might prove easier in adjusting the instrument than the one you have been accustomed to. At any rate, it is important that the end of the cord is not held so the pendulum swings from the over-all seven inches of its entire length.

To hold a pendulum perfectly still, waiting for it to start motion is a mistake! This is wasting energy that could be saved by simply starting the instrument swinging to and fro, which represents "no" by the way I have programmed my mind. In practice, I would pick up the pendulum, fit the end of the cord in the first joint of my second finger, start action to and fro, then ask a question that could be answered by a "yes" or "no" answer.

Suppose it was Tuesday and I asked the question, "is today Wednesday?" The instrument would continue swinging to and fro because that is a "no" answer to me. But if I ask the question, "is today Tuesday?" the pendulum would revert from the to and fro motion to a clockwise circle, which represents a "yes" answer for the way I am programmed. Now try making a statement that "this IS Wednesday," and watch how the instrument firmly continues to swing to and fro, indicating a "no" answer. Learning to read the reactions to your questions by the use of a pendulum takes patience. But the rewards cannot be counted in a whole lifetime.

A person can program the mind so the pendulum reacts in whatever movements are best suited for the "yes" or "no" answer. There are those who like the cross-wise motion for "yes," the to and fro for "no." Then I run into people continually who prefer the clockwise circle for "yes," and the counter-clock for "no." The reason I prefer the to and fro motion is that the pendulum should be in motion before a question is asked, and having it swinging in the "no" direction saves time and energy. I have learned many short cuts in dowsing, so a short cut represents energy saved. And energy to dowse is like gasoline for an automobile, when it's gone the fun is over.

How far should a pendulum swing to and fro before asking questions? I find that approximately four inches travel is usually about right, however, there will be times when the radiation is weak, which results in shortening the travel considerably. Loss of energy can react the same way, but dowers will discover they can dowse much longer with a pendulum before running out of energy than when using a rod.

The color of clothing can hamper dowsing, regardless of the argument you may have heard to the contrary. When I hear someone say colors make no difference, I know immediately the person making such a statement is still in this dowsing diapers. Colors can be used most effectively to aid in identification of almost anything the dowser might try to locate. UNITED DOWSERS magazine has carried articles pertaining to this subject, and the colors discussed have been tried and proven over a long period of time. So in case you happen to be dressed in some bright color, and your dowsing seems to have gone with the wind, try changing into soft colors and try dowsing again.

Experimenting with colors can be enlightening as well as educational. Try holding various bright colors in the free hand while dowsing different materials. Sometimes the instrument reacts normally, but then, there will be other times when it feels as if the instrument suddenly died. Change to another color and you will find the instrument reacting normally again. The colors that caused the trouble should never be worn while dowsing for that specific material.

The shape of the pendulum is extremely important, which is contrary to common belief. Take the UDA treasure pendulum for example: If the shape of this instrument should be changed, even slightly, the effectiveness would be completely destroyed. I know that certain radiations can be detected with a properly shaped instrument, but completely eliminated by another having a different design. It is this fact that makes pre-tuning pendulums possible.

My son-in-law and I have been experimenting with electrical circuitry in an attempt to design an instrument that would give an automatic read-out covering a mile in any direction. We are convinced our experiments will become a reality once everything has been completed. Treasures, minerals, oil, coal, clay, or anything under the sun could be detected immediately and precisely. Distance, depth, dimensions, and even the temperature could be recorded automatically. The instrument could be dialed to cover a given substance and a readout would be instant.

Although we are convinced that the unit would work perfectly, there are no immediate plans to manufacture them. The only reason it is being mentioned is for the purpose of adding that pre-tuning would be incorporated into it. I am convinced that dowsing instruments will eventually be manufactured to include discrimination in order that unwanted substances can be rejected automatically.

We know that pendulums react to pre-programming of the mind, and it is possible to program the mind so the instrument indicates the answers "yes," "no," and if we choose to do so, "treasures" may be added. The dowser must practice enough so the instrument reacts instantly, but this ability is gained rather quickly. There is one catch that must be straightened out in the mind first. And that is, being able to describe and identify what TREASURES really consist of.

One student recently tried to explain what treasure is, and the best description he could come up with was "what I would like to have." We can easily understand the meaning, but the mind would include lots of other things he would like to have, too. It might react to a beautiful young woman, a new automobile, or in case he happened to be hungry at the time, it might indicate the exact location to the closest restaurant. The dowser must not allow the mind to become confused by making vague demands such as this excellent example.

The mind must be able to identify exactly what you expect it to find through the aid of the dowsing instrument. Once it has a crystal clear identification, then it is possible to program it so the pendulum swings crosswise each time a treasure is within any given area being dowsed . . . especially from the map. But the pendulum will indicate treasures in the field and actually lead the dowser to them once the mind is properly programmed. Mine circles counter-clock to indicate death because I use the pendulum so extensively in health. No matter where death has occurred, I get the counter-clock circle. Many times massacre sites are found on maps whether I am dowsing for them or not. My instrument indicates them almost automatically.

What is the best position for the body while dowsing with a pendulum? This has been a big problem for amateurs as they generally tend to cross their legs, slouch as though they were preparing for a nap at their favorite hiding place, or posing as if it didn't matter what cards life dealt next. But dowsing is not a haphazard venture to be taken lightly. The subconscious (or maybe it's the Super Conscious) mind contains information, or at least the ability to get it, and you are trying to receive answers to your questions through this source.

The body should be somewhat erect, with both feet flat on the floor, the free hand kept away from the opposite side of the body, and a clear mind to work with. Almost any kind of clothing is acceptable but be aware of the color problem. You can dowse in a rain coat as easily as if you were wearing a tee shirt, and if rubber boots happen to be the proper footwear of the moment, that's acceptable too. Just make sure the palm of the free hand is not covered. Anything touching or covering the palm of the free hand has a tendency to hamper dowsing to some degree, therefore, knowing it and guarding against this hazard results in finding more correct answers.

When it seems everything is working backwards, no doubt it is! Don't miss a chance to stop and discover the trouble. Sometimes I dowse to find my own problems when it seems nothing turns out right. I might be asking the wrong questions, trying to be logical, or just have too many other things on my mind. For every problem, there is an answer. For every answer there must be a question. And for every question, dowzers should be capable of making discoveries that hold water when put to the test.

There will be times when we should not attempt to solve problems that involve other people. There is a law about invasion of privacy that extends beyond the civil laws of the land. God has laws that prohibit dowzers from stepping on other people's toes. I am convinced this is the main reason dowzers, psychics and other mind control groups fail to turn up people who have broken the laws of the land. We may have a tendency to judge, and the Bible tells us that's not up to us. Before jumping into the search for another person, ask permission to do so. This has kept me out of trouble many times and it's a good rule to follow.

Sometimes people are listed as "missing" and rewards are offered for their locations. I receive clippings out of newspapers, offering me half of the reward for finding the missing people. Somehow readers get the notion that I couldn't work on my own. They are quick to offer me fifty per cent if I will only take a few minutes of my time to make them rich by the other fifty per cent they would receive. I have seen greed too many times during my life, and these offers are usually refused as quickly as possible. Don't call me asking that I find people, or treasures on a percentage basis. Learn to do your own dowse because I can keep real busy working on my own projects.

Being awakened during the wee hours of the night by a telephone call from some dreamer saying, "I'll put my pencil on the map, and would you tell me which direction the treasure is, and how far" makes me dream of getting that person's neck between my hands. No more will I try to give directions by dowse over the telephone. People with no more consideration than that can go jump into the river.

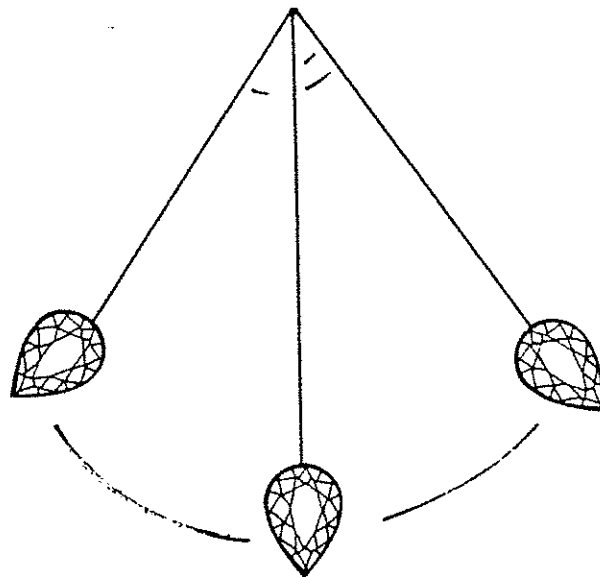

Most people can learn to use the pendulum rather proficiently if they will only practice. There is no need to lean on someone else when children seven or eight years old can progress so rapidly. I have a nephew who was using his pendulum at the age of eight and making others with much more experience look like amateurs. Tell him something that he questions in his mind and out comes his pendulum in your presence. "Now what was it you said?", he asks. I have seen statements changed almost like lightning when the person was challenged.

I have made this statement so many times it sounds like a broken record, but don't make treasure hunting one of your early projects in dowse! Don't even try to get serious at first, but use the pendulum as a pastime. Play games with it and expect to make a certain amount of mistakes. As you gain experience, your score will improve. Make all projects easy, and don't get involved in locating missing people or treasure projects for a year or more. Why? Because they are two of the hardest dowse projects you will ever engage in. This is for professionals rather than amateurs. Take your time and the experience gained will gradually prepare you for harder projects later.

A book could be written on the pendulum; in fact, many already have been. When a location has been made, remember that it WILL be successful if you program your mind correctly. The amateur should check a location, not to find the tons of gold his dowse instrument might indicate through improper questions or through his own mental implants. But check to see what actually IS there! This will make every location checked a success, and one of these times, to your pleasant surprise, at the bottom of the hole will be a treasure indeed.

There is a strange feeling when the dowser uncovers his first real treasure. The thought comes into his mind, "I actually did! — This little pendulum and I have finally worked out our differences. You little rascal, I've finally discovered the mysteries of the pendulum!"

The Secrets to Stroke Found

By "Lobo"

As my father lay in the hospital bed, in deep coma from his tenth stroke, something kept bothering me. There was an inner knowing that his suffering would result in my discovering the secret to stroke. While he fought for breath, I was fighting for knowledge that would prevent other people from preparing their bodies for stroke later in life. Nothing could save Dad's life this time. This was his tenth stroke over a four-year period, and I was forced to find out why.

Leaving the hospital room, I went to our motor home that had been parked in the hospital parking lot for the past twelve days. My sister's Winnebago was parked alongside, and we took turns sitting by Dad's bedside. Our family is large and there were other members spelling us off, but everyone knew Dad would never regain consciousness again.

Four years ago Dad lay in bed at another hospital after suffering eight consecutive strokes. The family was gathered there and we took turns transferring our own energy to Dad day and night for a month before his condition improved enough that our energy was no longer needed. God would have taken him then but the family was not ready to give him up.

This time there were no prayers for his life to be spared because Dad expressed his desires to be taken home to heaven. He has been making preparations for this journey for the past sixty years.

There was a question in my mind about why one person should have so many strokes. My past dowsing experience for diseases and their causes convinced me that I had the ability to discover the answer. The question, "Is something in his diet responsible?" was answered through my pendulum by a definite "yes!!" From this clockwise circling of the pendulum I would discover why Dad had undergone so many strokes, and in doing so, maybe prevent others from suffering the same fate.

Health must not be ignored or illness will surely be the result. We must learn more about nutrition in order to understand how vitamins and minerals play such an important role in keeping our bodies and minds healthy. Don't mistake me for a health food nut because that certainly is not the case. My diet contains junk foods just like yours. There are additives in the groceries we buy just like yours. But I have learned how to check my mineral/vitamin level and keep them within the safe zone, and believe me, that makes a whale of a lot of difference.

Many times I find myself getting disgusted with medical practice when it appears too much effort is being expended to keep from discovering cures for various ailments. Who does the medical profession think it is fooling? They have received far too many large government grants without producing valuable discoveries. Even when someone comes up with a discovery that works, many times that person is hauled into court on trumped-up charges and found guilty. Is it really a crime for a person other than a doctor to discover something of value to eliminate suffering or disease? I do not agree with such nonsense, and my discovery of the cause of strokes is just as important to anyone preparing his body for a stroke as it would be if a doctor uncovered the secret.

We have all seen how the medical association has tried to outlaw laetrile, after its value in the treatment of cancer has been established. Laetrile contains zinc, which makes it essential to cancer patients where the zinc deficiency caused the cancer in the first place. There would be no advantage in giving laetrile to cancer patients suffering from the two other cancer-causing mineral deficiencies, radon or terbium. Haven't most of us wondered why the American Medical Association has squawked so loud about laetrile after its cancer-killing history has already been established? Is progress purposely being suppressed?

Lately there have been rumblings from the medical association about making faith healing illegal. Now just where does an organization get more important than GOD??? Wouldn't you like to see an agency that could heal such a small thing as a pimple? I certainly would! Faith healing is taught throughout the Bible, and no doctor nor association can change that proven fact. GOD is the healer and He always has been.

I believe in doctors but I do not agree with the theory of treating the symptom instead of the cause. In my opinion there is a trend toward prolonging the ailment in order to have the patient return for treatment as many times as possible. Each visit is settled by a fee. And I cannot believe this was what God had in mind for the doctors to do.

Any hospital that does not have a stroke ward is behind the times. How many hospitals do you know of that boast their knowledge or practice in nutrition? Right here is where so many answers lie to the diseases and ailments the doctors in these multi-million dollar hospitals are treating. Does it make sense that a dowser has to find the cause of strokes or cancers when it should have been done by doctors?

Every kitchen contains the necessary ingredients to produce stroke and it's a wonder more people aren't stricken. The first item I found was cooking oils. Yes, regardless of the commercials you have seen on television, cooking oils do cause stroke and it doesn't matter whether they're made from corn oil, safflower, or soy beans. They're dangerous. Oil of peanuts, olives, or peppermint does not contain the harmful ingredients that destroy the tiny blood vessels as other oils do.

The tiny blood vessels in the brain are the ones that break down to cause stroke. Maybe you have noticed brownish looking places on your ankles that are actually broken blood vessels. These generally appear prior to hemorrhage in the brain, and can be a warning sign that your blood vessels are in trouble. Don't overlook or ignore such signs because the next indication that something might be wrong could be the ambulance at your door. Do something while there is still time.

Buttermilk has caused more strokes than you could count in a lifetime, and who ever suspected it could be the cause? There are harmful chemicals in the whey of ALL sour milk that destroys those tiny blood vessels just like the damage done by cooking oils. Farmers used to have strokes more than city folks because buttermilk was generally one of the items in their daily diets. There are people who still say "nothing quenches thirst like buttermilk."

Maybe it would be best to stress that buttermilk is only one of the varieties of sour milk that is dangerous. The sour cream used on those baked potatoes does the same kind of harm that any other sour milk or cream does to those tiny blood vessels. Cottage cheese, yogurt, and other dairy products that do not contain whey are perfectly safe. Every adult should consume a quart of whole sweet milk every week.

The third culprit that is found in kitchens is often used to season foods that are consumed by babies as well as adults. One lady I know has been treated for varicose veins and arteries since she was a teenager. Children all over the world are being damaged by this ingredient in a host of foods and beverages. It has been in use for so long, no one would suspect the damage it does to blood vessels.

What is this dangerous ingredient? It is nothing other than ginger, which is used in bakeries, bottling companies, canneries, restaurants, and is an old stand-by in home cooking. Ginger has probably done more damage to blood vessels than anything else under the sun because it is used in so many different foods and beverages. There are no age limits when it comes to the consumption of ginger, therefore, damage results from its use in all ages.

For every dangerous substance there is a neutralizer. The problem is that few people realize what they are. For the benefit of those who think they can't exist without cooking oils or buttermilk, you can still enjoy these foods without the worry of suffering a stroke. The neutralizer for the harmful chemicals in these two foods is mustard. And the kind of mustard is the same as you would put on a hot dog.

not pasteurized, not homogenized

For each glass of buttermilk consumed, eat one fourth teaspoon of mustard. Make sure the mustard is eaten at the same meal. Unless the harmful chemicals are neutralized, a glass of buttermilk will cause inflammation, and the blood pressure will rise ten points within three days. Inflammation is common in people who use these harmful foods, and high blood pressure is also assured to accompany it.

Ginger can be made safe by eating one cashew for each ginger cookie consumed. After learning how harmful ginger is to the tiny blood vessels, it's a pretty sure bet there will always be plenty of cashews around our home as a precautionary measure. Three ginger cookies daily for thirty days will cause varicose veins. Six cookies cause varicose arteries! Sometimes people undergo surgery for the purpose of having their veins stripped. This is just one example of the damage done by consuming the three foods mentioned. This kind of surgery can be avoided by knowing what causes varicose veins, then doing something toward protecting ourselves against it.

Your doctor isn't going to tell you. The local grocer doesn't know. But if you have read this far, there is no one to blame except yourself if you are stricken with a stroke.

After damage has already occurred to the blood vessels, is there anything that can be done to heal them? Indeed there is! Let's look at the problem as well as a diet to correct damage to various size blood vessels. Rhodium and zinc will be found deficient in people suffering blood vessel damage. Those minerals must be replaced in order for the body to heal itself. An excellent source of zinc is raisins. And the proper amount to be consumed would be anywhere from three to five ounces weekly . . . taking an ounce daily. Three weeks should be enough to heal tiny vessels, such as those in the brain. Eight weeks should be figured for large veins, and twenty weeks or more should be about right for large arteries unless extensive damage has occurred.

Raisins provide zinc, but don't forget that rhodium must be replaced in the body at the same time since both minerals are needed for the blood vessels to be repaired. One half teaspoon of vinegar daily for 4 weeks restores rhodium. Here again, allow 3 weeks for small veins, eight for large ones, and twenty or more for large arteries. I believe surgery for varicose veins could be almost eliminated entirely by restoring zinc and rhodium as described above. Strokes could be curtailed so drastically they would be wiped from the memory as a common old age problem. I believe every stroke ward should be turned into a school of nutrition in order to discover what causes illness rather than just treating patients for them.

It might prove interesting to inquire which of the three foods mentioned in this article is responsible for the people here-after who suffer strokes. Ask whether they used buttermilk regularly, cooking oil, or ginger. Before long you will see how these items are tied in with every last stroke victim's regular diet. Each time the answer is given, you will know beyond any reasonable doubt that the REAL secrets to strokes has been found.

Dowsing Is a Way of Life

By Gary Sinclair

The above statement is not true.

Dowsing is not a way of life but a way to a fuller richer life.

We are all born with access to the Universal Mind, but we have become so programmed to using the five senses and relating only to what we see, hear, taste, smell or feel that the natural access to the sixth sense has become blocked, thus access to the God-given storehouse of knowledge is not available to us because we have closed the door on ourselves.

The rationalizing away of shortcomings and mistakes apparently can be made to serve a purpose but frankly I have never been able to find out what that purpose is good for. Rationalization is taking the easy way out, blaming someone else for our own mistakes and weaknesses. When we do this we are lying to ourselves first and others second and in the end the vicious circle is perpetuated again and again.

The more we rationalize about ourselves or our problems the more insecure and closed-minded we become.

For many it is almost impossible to make a decision about even simple things. Some shun responsibility with their families and in their jobs, thus denying themselves the wonderful life they are entitled to.

A civil war was fought in this country over slavery many years ago, but so many are enslaved mentally today. They are drowning in a sea of fear because they are so concerned about what they think someone else is thinking of them, never realizing that they have no control over what someone else thinks. Here again look at life and yourselves realistically and you will find that so many of your fears will vanish.

In the study of dowsing mention is made time and time again about mental implants and the problems they can cause. It is this author's contention that many of these problems of mental implants experience in dowsing can be attributed to rationalization on the dowser's part, by refusing to look at himself and his motives honestly. If you make a mistake in your dowsing and end up digging a dry hole, stop and do some honest evaluation of the situation. Don't immediately blame someone else and don't take the foolish attitude that you are afraid to admit you made a mistake.

There is no sin in making a mistake. The sin lies in not determining why you failed and thus profiting by the failure. Many people have failed many times on various projects but you will not find the person who has successfully completed a project after numerous failures that will admit that he is a failure. He will admit that he has failed but never that he is a failure. Do the words, "failed" and "failures," scare some of you after seeing them in print? They shouldn't because you have the God-given success mechanism in yourself and through diligent practice of the art of dowsing with the right motives you can reach any goal you are capable of thinking of.

Another problem that can be attributed to mental implants is your subconscious. What have you programmed into it? Is it a burning desire for the wrong things for the wrong reasons? The subconscious is going to tell you exactly what it thinks you want to hear. Remember at this point you are deceiving yourself and yourself alone. Are you not infuriated when you deceive yourself? Those who practice rationalization as a mental way of life tend to act first and think about the consequences of their acts later. This can lead to problems in dowsing with mental implants, non-specific questions and poorly planned procedures, but why get concerned? The rat hole of rationalization is always available to crawl into.

Why do you want to be a dowser? Is it for instant wealth, prestige, self-satisfaction, the confidence and freedom from fear that it can bring? All of these reasons and more that each of us can think of are legitimate motives but there is one that is far more important than any of the others. That simply is the desire to help humanity regardless of race, creed or color, at any time in any way that we can. When you decide that this is your sincere motive you will find your dowsing problems drastically reduced and all of your other desires will be answered many times over.

God has told us He will provide for us and He does. Dowsing is the way to the Universal storehouse of knowledge and each of us who aspire to be successful dowsers will find everything we are looking for and more if we approach dowsing with the right motives.

We decide we want to find a hidden treasure. Fine, but remember the earth and all its treasures belong to God. Have we shown responsibility toward humanity and ourselves or are our motives those of greed and self-centeredness? The more responsible we become the greater will be the reward in all facets of our lives and God will give us the treasure we seek and lead us to it.

You will find freedom from your fears in helping others for the right reasons, because the human mind can only think about one thing at a time thus your own problems are put aside and the more often they are put aside, and for longer periods of time, the more insignificant they become.

What about healing with dowsing? What price would you put on your health or the health of someone else you were able to help through dowsing because you were the instrument God chose to use? A big lucrative treasure? Each of us has to look within ourselves and determine our own motives. The greatest treasure you may well find will be the look on someone else's face who has been healed. How many of us profess to have faith in God and ourselves? But things never quite seem to work out. Using healing as an example: we believe we can be healed or that God will heal someone else using US AS THE INSTRUMENT ONLY but results are not forthcoming. Why? Because we didn't act on our faith as though it had already happened. A little seed of doubt remained and we became discouraged. When God gives you something it is yours but you have to justify your faith in God and yourself. ACT. "Seek and you shall find."

I ask each of you to join me either privately or publicly and make the following commitment: to help as many people as you can, any way you can, at any time regardless of race, creed or color and be responsible to God, humanity and your dowsing.

Dear Sam & Alma,

Enclosed the article for the magazine; as you well know a book could be written on virtually any paragraph.

I have tried to keep it short and to the point hoping that the readers would get the point quicker and do some digging on their own.

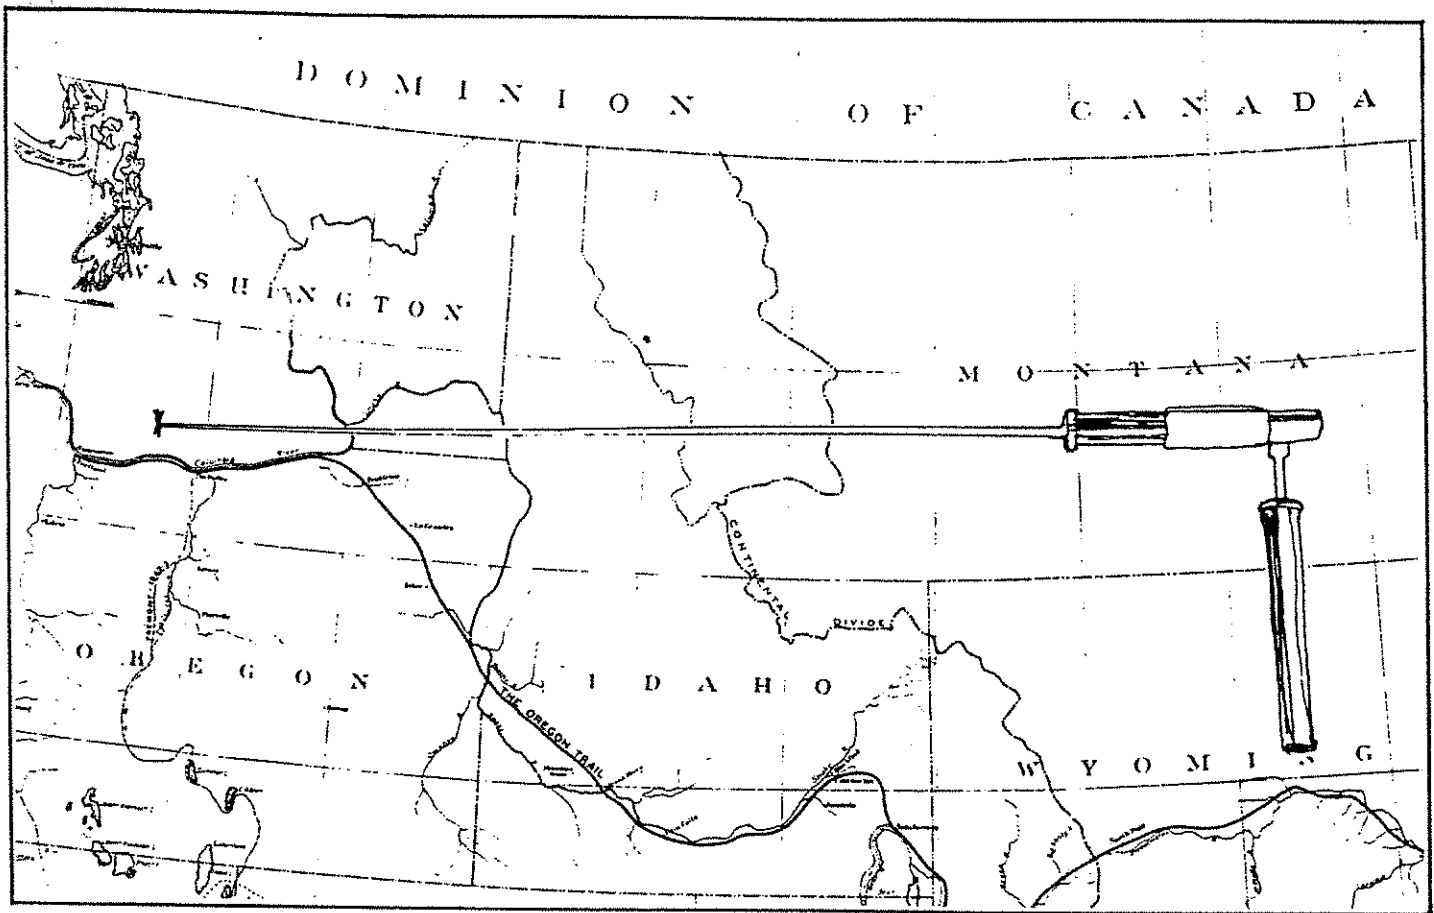

Mary and I have been reading the Bible and the results are fantastic. Every facet of our lives has improved. I guarantee you one thing, Sam; the devil is going to have to run awfully fast to catch me again.

I received a lot more than just instructions in dowsing at El Paso, thanks to you two.

We care,
Gary and Mary

Editor's note: the above letter accompanied Gary's splendid article, and we thought you readers might enjoy sharing it with Alma and me. Sam.

Rock Hunting with Lobo's Map and Field Rod

By Richard Watt

In the summer of 1977, I received a notice that our class was having a 20-year reunion the next summer and would I be interested in attending. This set my mind whirling just thinking about the old places and stories told to me by the old timers. I would finally get my chance to use my rod on objects and things close to where I grew up.

As time rolled on, month after month, I practiced more and more, getting the feel of dowsing. In practicing I used three dimes in containers, one real dime (one that contained silver), and two unreal dimes (that didn't have any silver in them). Sam told about throwing silver dollars on the ground or a group of silver dollars on the lawn to see how the rays actually felt, thus improving sensation and feeling. Also, I hid different objects and had the kids hide different objects in the house so I could practice trying to find them. Each day I was building on a mental conviction of what I was going to look for (adding a better thought and feeling to the good I had already acquired.)

January rolled around and time to start finalizing plans as to what, when, where, we were going to do. Time was a factor as on most trips. Most of our original plans were scrapped, except what we considered to be the most important. For me, looking for sapphires around Helena, Montana, was the prime objective. All dowsing practice was aimed at this.

Not getting the results from the dowsing the way I thought I should, I decided to take Sam's Basic Dowsing Course over again; so I did this, along with a good friend of mine. I wasn't in class two hours before Sam came along and had me correct my swing and the way I was holding the rod. I say Sam helped me, because although he is the teacher, all he could do is tell me where I was making my mistakes. The real change had to come in my own mind. If the change hadn't taken place, Sam could have talked all day long and I would have still been making the same mistakes. Another way I got the most out of the class was to become as teachable as I could. To me this means to come with an open mind, just listen, not open my mouth and stick my foot in it too many times and just learn all I could, and I did.

It was well worth the time, effort and energy spent to retake the class, and I would recommend the class to those who are having trouble with their dowsing.

July 7th was finally here and we were taking off, going to Salt Lake, up through Wyoming, stopping here and there along the way to see different people. I was practicing most every morning before other people got up. Dowsing along the way was keeping my dowsing up and my mind on a real and natural side of life, the mainly perfect and good side.

We finally arrived at our reunion and afterward went on to Helena, Montana, where my brother lives. We rested the rest of the day and then finally got down to business.

My brother had decided we would go to Guffy's Sapphire Mine. I was one of four around this area. One of my nieces had been there before, so she drew an outline of the place, and where things were located. Not telling them what I wanted it for, I folded it up and put it in my pocket. Even though my brother is a dowser for water, I didn't know if he could or would understand what I was going to do with the drawing. So about five o'clock the next morning I got up and went into the house and got out my rod and started dowsing the drawing for sapphires—the most, the largest I could find in one day's time. A short time later, my brother came into the room and all he said was, "Do you know what you're doing?" All I answered was, "Yes." And went on dowsing. He started fixing breakfast, and said, "When you get done I would like to talk about it." Before I got finished asking all the questions I wanted, the other folks came in so I put the rod away, leaving the questions unanswered.

Shortly after breakfast we left to go to Guffy's Mine. There are two ways to get there so we went south out of Helena on Highway 287 to Glasoil, then left on this road to Canyon Ferry Dam, crossed the dam and followed the signs to Guffy's Mine. On our arrival the owner took us over to the edge of the pit and explained to us how the shakers worked and just what we were going to do. At the time we were there the cost was $10.00 per day and this entitles you to 8 five-gallon buckets of sifted and screened gravel you could pick through all you wanted to. That was the maximum amount unless you wanted to pay more. You could rent picks and shovels and the rockers there also. We had our own picks and shovels so all we rented were the rockers for $2.00 per day. In other words there was a $10.00 charge for each person that used the pick and shovel in actually digging in the pit. The family could shake the shaker box at no additional charge.

Before we signed up I wanted to finish the dowsing that I had started in the morning, so I did some dowsing from where I was standing. Then I went down into the pits to find out exactly which claim I wanted, but the owner wanted me out of the pits until I had signed up, so the only thing left to do was to go register. What we didn't know was that we would be assigned a place to dig and that spot was #15, just the opposite side from the one I had picked by dowsing earlier in the morning.

In the picture, the arrow points to #15, where we did our digging. This picture shows one-half of semi-circle of the pit. Numbers run from left to right of the picture. Upon arrival in the pits we were informed by the neighbor in claim #17 that the person who had been digging there the day before had found nothing all day long. This was quite a blow at first but my brother and his youngest son and daughter, myself and two sons being very positive minded, said to ourselves, "We know the sapphires are here and we will find plenty of them." And we let what the other fellow said go by the wayside and forgot it. We were all very anxious to start but we knew we had better talk to some of the other people that had been here before or those that come every year. So while my brother and the kids talked, I went to the truck and dowsed the claim as to where we were to dig and what we were to throw away. (Looking at the picture you can see we had 3 or 4 foot of overburden to remove.) I found out from dowsing that from bedrock up to about one foot was what we should screen.

Acting as a team I dug, then my brother, then I took over altogether and left the screening to the others. (As Sam said in an earlier article, the work begins after you find the location in the field, and how true this is.) I dug, scraped the bedrock, and worked the cracks with a screwdriver and brushed the rocks with a small brush until all cracks were clean, and then put a blanket over what I had cleaned, so I would not have to clean it again when more material dropped on it. After about 5½ hours of digging we had reached our 16 bucket limit of screened gravel. We put the blanket over the claim, letting the others know we were coming back. Then off to the river to wash the gravel. This also is an experience of its own if you have never done it before. We were fortunate to find two couples there that knew how to shake and wash the gravel so the sapphires could end up on the bottom in the middle of the shaker.

Hand washers are made about one foot square with 2X2-inch thick sides and a wire screen on the bottom. Fill about half full, soak and then shake. I can't seem to explain the shaking process, but if you ever go there I'm sure there would be someone there to show you how it is done.

After washing about 3½ buckets of gravel we were all tired and worn out, but even then we had found more than the other couples had found in their eight buckets, so we quit. One of the couples informed us that the owner had a washing type machine and he charged $1.00 per bucket to wash. We decided to take them home and use the neighbor's electric washer. This was a mistake for the neighbor's husband was gone and would not be back until Friday. I say a mistake because if we had paid the $1.00 per bucket and had them wash all we had left, we would have realized how many sapphires we had actually found. Also, we could have reserved the same claim for the following day but we didn't. A teacher who had been at the reunion was coming in as we were going out so we told him which claim to ask for, and where to dig and he followed our instructions. When I phoned him later at this home in Nevada, he informed me that he had found more and larger stones than anyone around him.

Later in the week when my brother went back to take these pictures, he said the area was dug back as far as the owner would permit. The actual washing of our 16 buckets was not completed for several days after we left to come home from Montana.

Before it was time for me to return home, my brother and his son and I got to talking about dowsing and different ways it could be used. I got my rod out (and my Lobo Field Maps) and my three dimes and their containers, and not knowing which had the real dime set them on the counter. I had my brother pick up the rod and I gave him a few instructions to better his swing (my brother as I said earlier is a water dowser and his instrument is a leather strip with a piece of lead on the end). I asked him to pick out the real coin from the other two. To my surprise he picked the right one three times in a row, then gave it to his son and he did it also. I believe the impression of actually finding the sapphires and use of the rod left such an impression upon their minds that when they tried to find the real coin they knew it would work. This led on to the use of cards with the rod and hand dowsing. Things kept getting more and more involved about all the aspects of dowsing, and finally I did something I had said I would never do and that was to let my dowsing books out of my possession for a period of time. Not because I was afraid of losing them. No! Because I value them very, very much, because to me they are a quick reference source and they are my inspiration when I get low in spirit and just want to read and study what Sam and the others have written. My brother's interest is deep so I left them there for him to study, and now I have decided to get another complete set for him.

On the way home we stopped off at Spencer, Idaho, on Interstate 15 to look for fire opal. After stopping at the office in Spencer and having paid our way we went on to the mine. Here we found a few people digging for opal. One man showed us what to look for. Keeping this in mind, we dowsed for the largest opal we could get that day. (Not that we were greedy, but why settle for less when you have the means at hand to get the best?) We dug for awhile and found a large opal, but not a fire opal. Then we went back to the original question and realized that I had not asked for a fire opal, but only an opal. Reorganizing the question, we finally uncovered a very large fire opal. After deciding just how to get it out without breaking it, we used our hammers and chisels to break away the rock around it. After exposing it quite well we showed it to another man who had come to the diggings. He took his L type rods and a piece of our fire opal and proceeded to dowse the opal for quality and to gain experience. My younger son asked to borrow these and to dowse the opal also. I guess he wanted to show him that others know about dowsing also. This led to a conversation about dowsing and how the stranger used it, the only difference being that he used bait and we used the mind alone. Rain was on the way and cut the conversation shorter than I would have liked, but it is nice to run into others you can talk to about dowsing.

One thing that one must do at this opal mine is to chip away all excess rock from the fire opal. Your fee entitles you to so many pounds of opal or rock per day. Anything over this limit you must pay extra for, before leaving the mine. This was a good experience any way you look at it. The owner said we had found the largest opal that had come out this summer.

My wife likes to work on genealogy so we stopped one more day at the Latter Day Saints Library in Salt Lake City. Now I decided as long as I was going to spend more than most of the day there it would not be wasted. So I decided that I would dowse for the books that had references to my ancestors from Knox County, Tennessee. I couldn't take my rod into the library, so I used my hand to ask for books regarding my ancestors. This worked great. I pulled books off the shelves faster than my wife could look through them. Two of these books were on early cemeteries in Knox County. These two books contained most of my ancestors in that area, having arrived there about 1800. You should have seen some of the looks I got, just running my hand over the backs of the books!

SPENCER ID

Now this article wasn't written to advertise any of the places mentioned, but to bring out what you can do with your mind and dowsing. I think the most important thing for me was to condition my mind on just exactly what I wanted. The facts are not new, of course. I think one must think on the natural side of life (the perfect and good side only). It isn't what good words that you are thinking as long as you consistently think of good. This to me is like building a house of bricks. The more right thoughts you think the more your mind is building one good thought upon another thought, and pretty soon all bad or the unreal is forgotten.

There were a few mistakes made while dowsing the two mines. First, I didn't ask all the questions before starting to dig. I realize I should have asked more specific questions. Second, I let other people bother me while I was dowsing. Just remember you are an individual, you do your own thinking and what the other person says or thinks about you or what you are doing can't hurt you. The only thing that can hurt you is when you yourself think about what they say about you.

Does dowsing work? Being an individual this is a question that each and every one of us must answer for ourselves.

The picture shows the sapphires we found in about 5½ hours of digging. The stone with the arrow pointing to it was 12 carats uncut and 4.09 carats cut. It was cut by Margaret Reed of Helena, Montana. Several others were also faceted from 1.10 on down in a brilliant cut. The other two lying beside the big one were classified as uncuttable or maybe as free style cuts, along with many of the others in the picture.

Old Dogs and New Tricks

By "Lobo"

Most of you have heard the old saying, "It's hard to teach old dogs new tricks." There should be another like, "It's hard to teach old people to follow instructions." Naturally, I am referring to the students who attend dowsing classes because that's where my experience stems from. I could probably write a good selling book from my past experience in and out of the classrooms. The book would explain how hard I have tried to open people's minds to another world they seldom knew anything about except through hearsay.

No doubt, I would tell about teaching people how to locate rich mineral deposits on maps. The actual ground might be a thousand miles distant, or it might be five times that far away. I would tell of people locating streams of good sweet potable water on their maps, then going to the sites and drilling wells that produced the best drinking water in the entire territory. They dowsed to determine the flow, depth to the stream, its temperature and purity. Yes, they did this long before the drilling rig was brought to the site. And their wells proved their dowsing to be correct and perfectly demonstrated.

What were these water dowsers demonstrating? They were proving the ability to locate underground streams of drinking water, just like dowsers should be able to do. They were demonstrating how amateur dowsers should pile up excellent experience as they gain knowledge and confidence in themselves. They would begin to realize that finding those underground streams depends entirely on their own dowsing ability.

Old dogs CAN learn new tricks if they want to. They must pay attention because their learning ability is not as keen as it was when they were younger. Their hearing might not be so clear as it was a few years ago, and their eyes begin to see fuzzy things that weren't noticed when they were not quite so old. Have you ever noticed how the same things affect old people just like they do old dogs? One enjoys kind words and good treatment as much as the other. And old people prefer to have their own way just like old dogs. God bless them.

Have you ever noticed how an old dog will ignore commands as if they hadn't been given? And have you ever noticed how old people choose to ignore instructions as if they hadn't been heard? What makes old people pay their hard-earned money for instructions, then ignore what they paid for? Have you ever looked into a mirror or and seen anyone who did such things? Yes, I'll bet you have, too!

There is no intention to write the book that all these things would be said in but in case I did, lots of people would see themselves in it time and time again. Students from my classes would remember how dowsing was taught in open classes for the very first time in America because they were the first students to attend such schooling. Today there seem to be dowsing instructors around every corner, with nothing new to offer their students. Can you name a single one who has anything new to offer? The door is wide open for KNOWLEDGE, not copycats.

The population is split into two groups—those who don't believe in dowsing and the few who do. We must remember that at no time in history has there been more than a scant few proficient dowsers. There will never be a time when everyone learns to work with the rays and their minds together. Those who are devoted will stand out as the dowsers of tomorrow because they refused to quit. Doubtters will always outnumber the dowsers, but that's the way it's meant to be. It's this fact that keeps the profession from becoming overcrowded.

It's very annoying to answer the telephone and hear a voice on the other end asking me to pinpoint a treasure on their map because they are afraid to dig a hole. You would probably be amazed at the number of people who are scared to death of being failures if there isn't a ton of gold or treasure in the bottom of the hole they dig. Oh, you poor helpless people!!! Who will you lean on after UDA has been abolished at the end of 1978? Will you sink, or swim? I wish you could learn the meaning of self reliance because there is no dowsing future for you any other way. Learn from your own EXPERIENCE!

A large portion of you are trying to use dowsing strictly for locating treasures. Your own stubbornness and bull-headedness are the cause of your failure, but your mind is closed to suggestions. Dowsing can be used in treasure hunting but mark my word, you must pay the price by experience before you become successful in treasure hunting. So go right ahead chasing your tail and see who is right.

Maybe it didn't sink in before when I told how God places a curse on every treasure that is buried in the ground. But the Bible tells us about it, so I know it's a fact! Who does that put in complete control over all buried treasures? God controls earth's purse strings and God lifts His own curse on any buried treasure He wants you to have. But let's look at treasure hunting as He probably sees it.

There are two masters in charge of heaven and earth. God is master of all, but He allows the devil to tempt us as a method of separating Christians from the saints of the devil. Each individual is responsible for his, or her own actions. The Lord said, "Choose ye this day whom you will serve." The choice is strictly up to us. But the devil cannot take anyone to heaven, nor can he go there himself. All he has to offer is eternal damnation, suffering and sorrow. But God promises everlasting life and happiness beyond description. The Bible tells us "the half has never yet been told."

The Lord has promised the desires of your heart if you will walk upright before Him. This has to include treasures because I have recovered them and plan to dig up more as they are needed. In fact, He directs me to treasures He wants me to have. The curse is lifted and all danger is removed by the time I make the locations on the maps. The reason is simple; I first ask for a treasure I can have!

One of the main reasons so many people fail to uncover treasures is because they go about it all wrong. Too many are serving the wrong master—the one who does NOT have control over treasures. They may ask God to favor them, but He is not their master. The Bible says God will care for His own. Have you ever seen two armies where the general would grant the requests of soldiers from the opposite army?

How many times have you seen people serve the wrong master all their lives, then suddenly they are stricken with a serious health problem or some catastrophe beyond their control? Did you ever see one of these people pray to Satan for help? Of course not! But the situation is just the same as one soldier asking the general of the enemy army for help when the going gets tough. Why not ask the devil to heal your health problems if he is your master? Don't come crying to the Lord for help until you have chosen Him as your master.

I have taught hundreds of you how to use dowsing as a means of healing. You were asked to use the dowsing instrument while asking the Lord to heal various problems. Sometimes the problem would be health, other times it was a financial problem, and there were the broken homes. Some of you admitted it had been the first time you prayed in forty years. The prayer was mental rather than oral, but you were reaching out to God with your problem.

Instead of telling God you need a treasure, put your financial problems into His hands. He knows your needs even before you ask. But the Bible says, "You have not because you ask not." So muster up all the faith you can, then ask God for whatever you need. There are numerous promises in the Bible, but the Lord said, "First, seek ye the kingdom of Heaven, then all these things will be added unto you."

Sometimes the Lord will give treasures to people, but try as they may, they cannot make recoveries. They should have asked if they could have the treasure NOW. I have seen this happen many times, and probably my own experience in having to wait made the deepest impression. There is one treasure I must wait forty years to recover. I know why and what it is to be used for, which makes more sense than I could have understood without a revelation from the Lord.

Now let's talk about healing and how you can receive it for yourself or others who are in need. In the first place, there is only one source where healing is possible. No doctor has the power to heal, and no medicine can heal without the help of the Lord.

As I have stated before, anyone who is serving the devil is not entitled to call on God for healing. This does not mean that God never heals people who are not serving Him. He does many things through His love and grace that extend far beyond His promises. When we call on Him, we should make sure that He is our master by repenting for our sins and asking Him to come into our heart.

My Dowsing Tells Me

By "Lobo"

The average person could drastically reduce medical bills and enjoy better health by having a better understanding of vitamins, minerals, and their importance in the diet. There is probably less known about the proper vitamin/mineral balance in the human body than any of us care to admit. Most of us rely on someone else to manage our health program, but the truth is, the person being depended on may not know enough to handle the job properly and the first thing you know, something goes wrong.

No doctor has ever heard of vitamins V, X, Y and Z because they were not discovered until I found them by dowsing. Yet each one of these vitamins is just as important as vitamins A, B, and C. Would you care to guess the percentage of the population that is deficient in these newly discovered vitamins?

For the benefit of mankind, I will list each of these new-found vitamins and the best sources where they may be found. Medical research should have a field day isolating them, then trying to learn how they work in the body to protect it from diseases that result from those particular deficiencies. Personally, I am not banking on them very much because it has taken a mighty long time to discover that vitamin C wasn't the answer to the common cold. Why does it take so long to make such discoveries as to what amount of each vitamin the body requires for a normal balance? Is medical research doing their job, or could it be that the money pumped into the organization by the federal government is a factor? Common sense tells me that someone is not doing an efficient job for his salary.

There is no intent to pick on any person or organization, but the point I am trying to bring out is the lack of knowledge available on vitamins and minerals that no human or animal can live without. Too many vitamin bottles are labeled "daily requirements have not yet been established." My question is: who is responsible for establishing the proper daily quantities needed, and why isn't the job being done? Look at the warning on any package of cigarettes made in America and you will see "The surgeon General has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health." Just because the Surgeon General has made such a determination certainly doesn't make it a fact. And my dowsing tells me that smoking is definitely not the cause of cancer as the general public has been brainwashed into accepting.

Before a person can possibly have cancer, one of three minerals must be deficient in the body for a long period of time. These three essential minerals are radon, terbium, and zinc. It's utterly impossible for a person to have cancer from any other cause. So get all the mice to continue smoking cigarettes and their cancer rate will not increase one iota. Why? Because smoking doesn't deplete any of the three elements that protect the body against cancer.

Smoking can damage the lungs when the vitamin S level is lowered in the body; however, smoking does not decrease vitamin S. And the theory that smoking damages the heart is as unfounded as vitamin C guarding against the common cold. These statements are not true. Where does one find vitamin S? Black walnuts are one of the best sources with English walnuts being a second excellent food that is rich in this vitamin. There is no need to read a label that someone thinks might be the proper amount of walnuts to consume. Eat all you want and your vitamin S level will take care of itself.

Arthritis is one of our national health problems that countless people have been led to believe can be controlled by taking aspirins. Doctors recommended aspirin for years and I wonder how many people have suffered years on end because they were given the wrong advice? Notice the commercials on television advertising aspirin for the relief of arthritis. Maybe the pain is suppressed somewhat, but dulling pain is not the proper method of discovering a cure in my estimation.

My dowsing tells me that common arthritis can be eliminated by rectifying the vitamin S deficiency. Also, infective arthritis, osteo, and rheumatoid are the result of vitamin S being deficient in the body; and these afflictions disappear when vitamin S is restored.

Some young people have a notion that gonorrhea is a temporary condition that eventually disappears if ignored long enough. I have heard the statement from teenagers that it was "no worse than a runny nose." Little do they realize how this disease attacks and completely destroys the joints in the body. The largest joints are literally eaten away first, then the second largest, and so on. I know of cases personally where hip and knee joints were replaced, and in some cases the body rejected them just as failures in heart transplants were experienced a few years ago.

Gonorrhea should be treated as early as possible because this is no disease to ignore. In cases where gonorrheal arthritis has made its appearance, vitamin T is the answer, as it is with tuberculous arthritis. But the damage done can be tremendous; therefore, time is required for the body to mend itself as the vitamins responsible for the necessary healing slowly makes the repairs.

Infective polio arthritis has been mostly ignored because of the lack of knowledge to properly treat it. Here again, we find the answer in vitamin P which is seldom heard of outside of the medical circles. But in order to maintain health, no vitamin nor mineral can be ignored as if it played no part in our daily lives. We can no longer live in ignorance and blame ill health on fate or luck. If a doctor isn't knowledgeable in vitamins and minerals, then explain how he can possibly have the qualifications to handle your health program.

During the polio epidemic there were numerous young people who enjoyed perfect eyesight. Little did their doctors know that later eye trouble could be traced right back to polio. I doubt that one in a thousand doctors are aware of it today. But the polio generally causes caries of the spine that gradually affects the eyes as the years pass. The eyes become weaker with age, and this condition continues to worsen to such a degree that blindness can result. Polio victims should be aware of this condition and insist that medical treatment be provided. Radionics is the only treatment I know of presently that is effective but there could be other help I am not aware of.

I happen to be a firm believer in doing whatever is possible to maintain a family health program as a way of life rather than depending on someone else. In other words, I do not believe in rushing to a doctor for the treatment of every little ache or pain. Learning to care for one's self should not be considered wasted time just because there are lots of hospitals and scads of doctors available. Use them when necessary but try to take better care of your health on a regular basis and learn more from experience.

How could a person lower high blood pressure if a doctor wasn't available? I remember going into a medical clinic several years ago to get my blood pressure checked. There was no question but what it was higher than normal because I had a headache, flushed face, dizziness when stooping, and the symptoms of high blood pressure.

The receptionist handed me four pages to fill out and my dander was riled over so much paper work. I was willing to give my name, age, address, and explain that I was paying cash, not making an application for credit. At the time I had something over two thousand dollars in my pocket, and I figured that should be ample to pay for having my blood pressure tested. She was very firm on their "policy," and I was just as firm that I was paying in cash. I finally walked out, dropped by the grocery store, bought a few cloves of garlic and lowered my blood pressure without having to be separated from my two thousand dollars. Now I can take my blood pressure easily by dowsing and anyone else can learn to do the same. If the receptionist hadn't been so insistent on the forms being filled out, I might still be doctoring for high blood pressure.

When people have a long history of high blood pressure it can almost always be traced to inflammation or infection in the body as the cause. Dowsers should be able to pinpoint the location in the body and identify it quickly. Eliminate the inflammation and watch high blood pressure vanish right along with it. The higher the blood pressure, the worse the condition. Garlic may lower it temporarily but seldom results in a permanent cure.

Heart diseases account for countless deaths that could be postponed until these people die of old age. These deaths are not only needless; they are absolutely senseless because they are caused by mineral deficiencies that are so easily replaced. Rhenium and zinc protect the heart and circulatory system from 90% of all diseases affecting them. Testosterone, which is a hormone, is found in one of the new vitamins I recently discovered which is vitamin Y. Heart diseases could be wiped out completely by having the knowledge that causes it, then following through with a good vitamin/mineral checkup frequently.

Another health problem of staggering statistics is caused by the deficiency of the hormones, thymin and thyroxin. These two hormones work in conjunction to dissolve stones anywhere in the body. The thyroid and thymus glands are responsible for producing these vital hormones, so when stones form anywhere in the body, it's a sure sign that one of these glands is not functioning properly. Sometimes there could be both.

Dowers who know how to check for stones, then dissolve them without having to resort to surgery are lucky indeed. More minerals are being destroyed through contaminated food these last few years than has happened during all the history of the world. Anything that robs the body of minerals is a definite threat to health. Our government tries to protect consumers from foods and products that could be harmful to health, but they lack the ability to determine what poses a threat because they just don't understand how vitamins and minerals work to protect us from diseases.

Chemicals used in fertilizers or spray that destroy minerals in the soil in which food is grown should be banned from use. Here lies the real cause of many diseases. When it becomes necessary to spray against insects, that is a sure sign of unhealthy soil conditions because insects do not attack healthy crops. These crops lack minerals needed to produce healthy bodies, so the result is, whatever minerals are lacking in the crops grown in mineral-deficient soil produce crops that must be sprayed against insects; and the people consuming them will be deficient in the minerals those crops should provide.

Who would ever imagine that bursitis could be the result of eating spinach or rutabagas. People have suffered from this very same condition for God only knows how many years. They didn't realize spinach or rutabaga destroyed the mineral, rhodium, in the body, thus causing bursitis. Anyone suffering from this condition will be glad to know that turnips are rich in rhodium. Eating them restores the deficiency quickly and bursitis does a vanishing act that beats cortisone shots seven ways from Sunday.

What actually happens when cortisone shots are injected into a shoulder affected by bursitis? Cortisone is poisonous and the body immediately tries to eliminate it from the system. You might compare the red blood cells with bees in a hive. When anything threatens the body, red blood cells rush to that location in order to combat the problem just as bees attack an intruder that threatens the hive.

Cortisone does nothing toward eliminating bursitis by itself, but because the body is alerted to that area by the outside intrusion, it begins to work toward eliminating it. Healing forces take over and the shoulder is restored to health even though the rhodium deficiency still exists. Healing one wound by inflicting another is certainly not the best method. Restore the rhodium deficiency and allow the body to heal itself in a natural way. Turnips may not be the favorite food on the menu but the minerals they contain are essential to health.

There may be times when you experience the distress of "Achyilia gastrica," or in the layman's language, the lack of stomach juices. People buy all kinds of fizzes, stomach relievers, anti-acid preparations and in many cases they still have to suffer it out until the system eventually rectifies the problem. The fish, halibut, will cure this distress the natural way quicker than anything I know of. Don't get in the habit of swallowing every medical concoction available without a prescription. I believe most over-the-counter medications are harmful regardless of how easy they are for the public to purchase.

When it comes to a balanced diet, what does it actually consist of? Can the average family afford it? The following list is simple, very inexpensive and provides all the vitamins and minerals needed in the diet covering one week. Other foods should be consumed, also, because there is not enough bulk, liquid, nor food to make one feel comfortable. But if these foods are included in the weekly diet, there should not be deficiencies in either vitamins or minerals for that week.

Food	Child 2-10	Adult
Whole milk	2 qts.	1 qt.
Dates	3 oz.	5 oz.
Raisins	2 oz.	3 oz.
Liver	2½ oz.	4 oz.
Fish	1 oz.	3 oz.
Molasses	½ oz.	1 oz.

There are diets for this and that until we tend to ignore them from sheer boredom. I am not giving you a diet for the purpose of losing weight. In fact, this is no diet at all; it is merely foods that should be INCLUDED in your diet for better health.

Once these foods become part of the weekly menu, colds, flu, and most of the health problems we all experience will begin to vanish. You will not be able to have cancer, heart trouble, muscular diseases, viruses, or a common cold. The system becomes stronger and is able to resist health problems that others who are not on this diet cannot fight off. You should have more energy and feel better because there will be no deficiencies in those life-giving vitamins and minerals. If there are certain items in the list, such as liver, that you cannot stomach, smother it in something that makes it tasty but do not dismiss it from your weekly intake because it is extremely important! If necessary, tell yourself you are taking it for your heart, then do it. Anyone adding these foods to the weekly diet for a period of three months will no doubt make it a practice for the rest of their life.

Warts can be "wished away", bought for a penny, and rotted away in the knot of a thread as examples of the mind eliminating them. They can be burned off by your doctor, either with acids, electric needles, freezing, or by surgery. Or you can apply lemon juice to them daily for four days and they generally disappear within a few days. Large ones might require a few more applications but as long as lemon juice makes them vanish, who cares if a little more time is required? The natural method is always the best and we should depend on this system more.

How could a person get rid of moles? Well, you might consider a surgeon as most people do in these situations. But notice how the treatment of moles is found in the weekly diet mentioned earlier: eat one ounce of raisins three times a week for six weeks to eliminate moles. Here again, if they are large ones, allow a little more time as you would do with large warts. Skin blemishes usually fade away as the proper vitamins and minerals are restored to the system. Women concerned with their complexion will love the radiance they gradually acquire.

These are just a few of the things my dowsing tells me. Time will prove the effectiveness as more people decide to experiment on their own from the findings given here. Some of them have already proven their values many times and others are currently being tried. They are offered here for whatever they may be worth—to a few, or a world full of people.

The Mysterious Aura

by "Lobo"

Have you ever wondered what your aura would look like—if you could see it? Did you know that there is a glow around your body that is invisible to most people, but tells so very much about you? And would you believe that every ailment in your mind and body shows in your aura like a neon sign? Settle back and allow me to introduce you to yourself in all the most vivid colors imaginable.

Try for a moment to visualize a rainbow in all its array of beauty, but there is no form or arch as we know rainbows. There are bits and pieces of beautiful colors scattered about as if the rainbow had been bombed and blown to smithereens. Of course, this is not a perfect description of your aura, but with a little stretching of the imagination it will suffice as a crude description of you in color.

The age of a person can be determined easily by what we will call the "life band" that surrounds the broken pieces of colors mentioned earlier.

The life band is approximately one-fourth of an inch wide for a one-year-old child. By age ten, the band will be a full inch in width, then continue expanding one-tenth of an inch for every year of age thereafter. An eighty-year-old person would have a life band eight inches wide.

These peacock-like colors that accompany you throughout your life do not die out when death occurs. No, they will never leave regardless of the length of time your body remains in the grave. In fact, the aura serves as a beacon, marking the whereabouts of your remains forever. It protrudes through the ground to a height of approximately eight feet above your grave. Maybe this is one way to tell us man never dies!

The aura is a permanent record of each individual, only in colors that record details. From the color of the life band it is easy to identify male from female. Olive green is the color of the male's aura, and scarlet identifies females. These will be the colors found in the life band that actually emits above the grave forever. Flowers cannot duplicate the beauty of these colors that accompany you, and words of description fall short in duplicating the hues and intermingling of colors. Here is where the mouth cannot describe such beauty as the eyes see.

Health plays an important role in making up the various colors of the aura. Sometimes the colors are vivid and clear, then ill health is accompanied by what is sometimes termed as "impurities" in the aura. At such times there are smoky, muddy, cloudy, hazy, and sometimes black spots, ranging from large to small in size that indicate certain health problems have occurred. The aura is probably one of the very best means in locating health problems, even before the conditions advance far enough to become serious.

Every organ of the body can be quickly examined by the aura, and the trouble spots are obvious. For example, a healthy heart emits the color, marigold, but an unhealthy heart emits the color crimson. Think of the importance this could be in properly diagnosing illness. Just yesterday I received a phone call from a man in a foreign country who was concerned about a young man with serious health problems. His appendix had been removed, but the real source of his trouble was a severe case of toxins, namely streptococcus. It was the worst case I have ever encountered and the doctors diagnosed it appendicitis.

A healthy liver shows in the aura as dark brown, but an unhealthy one shows as violet, so here again is an opportunity to tell quickly and precisely whether the liver is in trouble. Some day doctors may adopt this method of looking at the aura instead of making so many wrong guesses about health problems. On the other hand, if the medics refuse to change, then the patient might be forced to insist on having those things taken care of that the doctor is directed to do, and no more. It might turn out more like the owners of automobiles taking their puddle jumpers in for one thing to be done and nothing else.

Have you ever wondered what your stomach would look like through an aurascope? You would see it as gorse yellow, when in a healthy condition. When the stomach is unhealthy the color changes to golden brown. Any variation between these two colors would indicate something was wrong, depending on how much change in color there was.

The gall bladder emits the color, scarlet, when in a healthy condition and changes to rose madder when an unhealthy condition exists. We can read the condition of the organs in the body by knowing their locations in the aura. When stones occur in the gall bladder, they show in the aura as laurel green. In fact, stones anywhere in the body will have this color, but with moderation according to their location.

There is no organ in the body that cannot be identified easily and quickly by knowing where it is found, and reading the colors. In fact, after a little practice, it is possible to identify organs of the body, even if they were removed and thrown into a barrel like we used to pickle meat at butchering time. Each organ has its own color, or shade of color that separates it from all the others.

The healthy spleen emits the color, canary yellow. But it changes to ultra-violet when there is an unhealthy condition. If a person died as the result of an unhealthy spleen, the ultra-violet color would emit above the grave and stay forever, as if it were a permanent health record that was carried into eternity. When this system of diagnosing illness is adopted, death certificates will have to tell it like it really is! The patient will know almost as much about his health condition as the doctors.

Visualize your pancreas in the aura as being a jade color because that is its natural color when healthy. In the aura it will be nestled in the color, marigold, which is the heart, and dark brown for the liver, navy blue for the lungs, gorse yellow to identify the stomach, scarlet for the gall bladder, and canary yellow to locate the spleen. And in these mixed colors stands the color, jade. This color is actually telling you that your pancreas is healthy. But if it should be the color, flame, you would immediately know that a low blood sugar condition exists. Diabetes would be indicated by the color, golden brown. Notice how each organ emits its own color and is seldom similar to another in the region of its location.

Ordinarily the kidneys show in grass green color except when they are diseased or unhealthy. At that time they will be geranium, or you could have one of each colors if just one was unhealthy. Isn't this a lovely way to view one's insides?

As strange as it might sound now, the time could come when health conditions of any individual were as revealing as the colors of their clothing. Just imagine yourself walking down the street when a neighbor greets you, then follows with, "I see you have a bladder infection this morning." The tell-tale color, marigold, would indicate the bladder trouble because it should normally be violet.

Can't you visualize the town gossip making the rounds telling everyone, "Mary had a hysterectomy last week because she ain't got one now." Of course, she would be talking about Mary's uterus, which normally emits the color, linen. But over a period of time the town gossip noticed the color changing to electric blue, indicating an unhealthy condition. You could hold no secrets about yourself.

Any problem in the colon could be identified by the change in color from cream to cerise. Carnation would indicate colitis, while faecal impaction would show violet. Cancer in the colon, or anywhere else in the body would show cardinal red in the early stage, then turn violet in the advanced stage. So you can readily see how important the aura could be toward better health if there were some way to look at it clearly.

The study of the aura can be very fascinating. The information available from such a study is almost limitless. There is a specific color for every disease, for every ailment, and every situation that might affect health. The larynx is identified by its carnation color until something happens healthwise. It, like all other organs, has a series of colors that are used to identify any disease, or problem. Golden brown is the usual color for an unhealthy larynx.

The brain is very complicated to read in the aura because of its vast complexities as the control center for the body. A healthy brain emits the color, Parma violet, then changes to cream when unhealthy. But there are colors of all kinds intermingled in the aura of the brain as each organ, either healthy or unhealthy, can be located. Here is a challenge worthy of much determination because the entire body is represented in detail as if in technicolor.

Every color, regardless of size, represents an organ or part of the body. Even the color of a person's eyes may be detected from the aura hovering above the grave. Blue eyes would show as marigold, while brown eyes could be seen as Parma violet. Hazel shows as linen and black eyes would emit the color, golden brown.

Coloring the hair is only a temporary thing that does not show in the aura. Black hair emits the color, crimson, but grey hair shows in the aura as terra cotta, regardless of the dyes used to cover it. Blonde can always be identified by its marigold, and red hair emits the color, laurel green.

By now you should be getting fairly well acquainted with yourself in color. There are three main bands, or circles, found in the aura. I have not gone into details since there would be far too much to cover in a short magazine article. Eventually I plan to develop an aura-scope that will make every last detail of these colors visible. My plans are to build a laboratory and explore the unknown along with several ventures that presently hold priority. Scientists, engineers, and technicians will be employed on a full-time basis. I have many things to offer the world that will be made available as time permits. I believe most of you will see the day when reading auras will become a pastime for some and a business for others. Yes, it will happen!

Letters, we get letters about Sam "Lobo" Wolfe's Dowsing Instruction Courses

How can I say "Thank you" for the great things you taught us in the advanced class. I thought I was a pretty good dowser when I came to your advanced class—but I found out I was just beginning to open the door to what dowsing offers.

The things I feel I gained the most benefit from in the advanced class were; the true feeling of the real self when I pick up the dowsing rod and use it for what it was designed for—to help other people—and to know that I have the key to the whole world in my hand—the dowsing rod.

Sam, through the knowledge gained from you in the advanced class, I can say I have cut off at least twenty years towards becoming a professional dowser. I still have a ways to go, but with the help you gave it won't be as far or as tough.

"Thank you, Sam", and I guess this is the best way I can say it... "Thank You".

Sincerely,
Gene
